The feeding of Waxbills is simplicity itself; white millet, spray millet, aphides and clean water; and with good luck you may hope to follow in the footsteps of Miss Alderson, but remember that luck is the prize given to hard work and plenty of it.

Perhaps some day when I'm turned out to grass, like Nebuchadnezzar, or an old horse that is past work, I shall have another try at breeding Orange-cheeks, but, alas, I can never be the first, for already another has stepped down before me.

While I think of it, there is one little caution I must lay down. It is hopeless in this country to let your Waxbills nest in growing bushes. I know it looks pretty and natural, but you have to think of the weather. In Africa rain in the breeding season is practically unknown. Here in Yorkshire we have such rain as, according to Bishop Arnulf who visited Jerusalem about the year 700, "exhibiteth God's peculiar attachment to this place." It is such as no nest built by mortal Waxbill can withstand for five minutes. Therefore take care that when the nest is built there is a good dry roof overhead. If you will let them build in a bush, before they begin, rig up an umbrella over it, and trust in Providence that they will face the monster.

And now I will end, lest you should be as polite as the people of Suffolk. A curate told of a deaf old woman whom he was teaching, and who, to his enquiry, "Can you hear?" replied, "Can't hear a word, dearie, but you go on!"

FUN IN THE FANCY.

By E. H. FULCHER

Amusing reminiscences by the treasurer of the Manchester and Northern Counties O.S. of his early experiences as a bird-keeper.

MY first venture of any consequence into bird-keeping was made just after I had married and got a home of my own. My next-door neighbour had a Canary whose singing I had often admired. One day I was chatting with him over the yard wall, when he was cleaning out the cage, and his wife was grumbling about the mess the bird made. She asked him why he did not get rid of it? I said nothing at the time, I was busy thinking. I had not been married very long, and I thought that perhaps my wife would not object very strongly to a few stray seed-husks. Eventually I struck a bargain with him for the bird and cage, and before long my wife and self became very much attached to our pet—so much so, indeed, that when ma-in-law suggested that we should give it to her for a birthday present we decided that we would buy her another instead. We bought her a very nice green Canary.

Father-in-law Catches the "Fever."

The following spring father-in-law and myself caught the "fever" properly. We decided that we would start breeding Canaries. Dad had a double breeder, so we bought two hens. These we put one in each compartment. They were not very long before they showed signs of wanting to nest. They seemed to settle down fairly well, and were soon very busy making nests and pulling them to pieces again. The green cock was very busy indeed during this time, and seemed to take full charge of operations, for as soon as his mate went to the nest he pulled her out and got in himself. Very much the same thing was happening in the other compartment. It seemed to be a matter of dispute as to which should occupy the nest. However, one fine morning, on looking in the cage, we were delighted and mystified to find that there were four eggs—one in each nest and one on the bottom of each compartment.

We compared notes and came to the conclusion that we must have missed seeing two eggs (one each side) the previous day. But next day the same phenomenon occurred! I suggested writing to the papers, but dad thought there might be some natural explanation of this extraordinary happening. He took the green cock back to where I had bought it, and the dealer did not take much convincing that it was a hen he had sold me. He was very reasonable, and gave me another in exchange. At the same time I bought a German Roller cock to go with my own two hens, and we made a fresh start!

My next venture took place about five years after this. I got acquainted with an old fancier who had once won a medal for the best bird in a show with a Crested cock. I thought this a good opportunity to get both birds and advice. My friend fixed me up, and I set to work in earnest. I followed a different plan with the birds. I had once as a child seen a Crested Canary at my uncle's house, and I felt quite competent to pick out my birds for myself! I selected two which I thought would suit me. I bought another hen from another source, as I did not think it wise to get all my stock from the same room.

This time I had great luck. I reared seventeen young ones. These were all winners, of course! But I thought it as well to have a look round before showing my prowess on the bench, so I paid a visit to the Manchester and Northern Counties O.S. open show at the Hulme Town Hall. My first rush was to the Crest classes. I was very much disappointed in the exhibits I found there. There was not one in all the classes to compare with the birds I had left at home! I went back and cleared right out—cages as well as birds. I decided that I could not lower myself to compete with such Crests as I had seen winning at the show.

A Decision to Breed Mules.

Next spring the "fever" recurred as strong as ever. I decided that I would breed Mules. I had a room upstairs which was not in use. I set to work and made a nice aviary, making a very good job of it. I wired off a corner about six feet by five feet, and the full height of the room. In this I fitted up a fountain fed from the cistern. I turned in a few cock Britishers, Linnets, Redpolls, Goldfinches, Siskins, Greenfinches and Chaffinches, with Canary and Bullfinch hens, about 25 altogether. I filled up the seed hopper, turned on the water fountain, and sat down to watch the birds start housekeeping! But they seemed as if they wanted to be left alone. So I left them alone.

Before very long my wife called me. Water was dripping through the ceiling! I rushed upstairs and found that the joint I had made in the feed pipe was leaking. I made that right and helped to clear up the mess. The birds settled down, and it was very interesting to sit in the room and study them. They commenced to build their nests. Here another difficulty presented itself: Each pair of birds wanted the site already occupied by another pair. To make matters worse, they all seemed to want the same piece of nesting material. As fast as one pair got it into position, another pair would take it away. I began to think Mule breeding was not all "beer and skittles." Then a heavy blow fell.

If I Had Only Known!

My wife and I were to go out all one Sunday. First thing in the morning I went into the room and replenished the seed hoppers. I cleaned out the fountain and set it going again, and had a final look round to make sure everything was in order. Then we went out. It was fairly late in the evening before we got back. Sometimes I think I would never have gone back at all if I had only known the trouble I had to face! By some means or other the overflow pipe from the fountain had become stopped up, and the whole of the day the water had been overflowing into the room. We will draw the curtain over what followed. Suffice it to say that I disconnected that fountain!

I have now got a nice lot of Norwich Plainheads together. I only wish, however, I could make the judges see the good points in them which I myself can see! Still, I have managed to get out of the novice stage in members' shows; and who knows but that I may some day get a medal for best bird in the show? I often smile to myself when I think of the fun I have had with my feathered pets. I am not so certain that my wife has always seen the "funny side." Anyhow, as she says: "Although we have not much money, we have seen life."

The Early Nesting of Budgerigars.

Sir,—Mr. T. J. Turner will have to take a "back seat," as I had Budgerigars with eggs at Christmas, the first of which hatched on Jan. 1, and despite the Arctic weather of that month, and an open wirework side to my shelter, the old birds reared five "babies," and now again have young ones hatched out. The Budgerigars seem able to stand anything in the weather line and revel in the rain.

A Proposed Newcastle Society in the Interests of Novices.

Sir,—Some fanciers of Newcastle and Dis. have asked me to write Cage Birds to state a society is being formed in the interests of novices of all sections, who will have much to gain by being members; also each member will be elected separately on the committee, so as to cause harmony and honesty. Notices of the meetings will be published shortly in Cage Birds. Persons desirous of joining can obtain any further particulars about the society and its prospects by writing me.

Birds Not Judged at Milford Haven Show.

Sir,—In last week's Cage Birds I was very much surprised at reading a complaint by Mr. Harry Lohr, of the treatment he had received at Milford Haven Show. It all arose out of an unfortunate mistake, the explanation of which he was quite satisfied with, so I do not propose to go into partieulars here; the details are purely local, and consequently cannot be of interest to the general body of fanciers. Suffice it for me to say, as manager of the cage bird section of the above show, that in my correspondence with Mr. Lohr I undertook to see that his out-of-pocket expenses would be refunded him by the committee, or, failing that, by myself. At the meeting on Feb. 27th (the first meeting after the show which the secretary could convene) the matter was brought forward, and it was decided that the claim for expenses be paid in full, and the sec. was instructed to pay same forthwith. You can, therefore, readily imagine my surprise at reading Mr. Lohr's letter, as I quite expected that the affair was over, and he had received his cheque. I have handed Cage Birds to our sec., so I expect to see his reply and explanation in this week's issue.

The Judging of Quality Song at Linnet Singing Contests.

Sir,—I should like to have a few words on the judgiug of quality song. It is a great trouble to some of the novices who attend these contests to understand the value of the quality song, and it is suggested that there should be a certain number of marks for certain notes, so that at the end of the contest they would be able to see what marks their birds had. Under the system that now exists the judges have got to keep the song in their mind. It is claimed that in an entry of say sixty birds it is impossible for them to do this, but if there were marks for notes and also for style and voice, they would be counted at the end of the contest, and any fancier who wanted to know what his bird had done could be told; also where his bird lost its place. I claim that if this was done it would give more satisfaction, as from the sheets that are handed in to me as secretary I cannot inform any competitor what his bird has done, only refer him to the judge. I should like some other fancier to take up this grievance who is more experienced than I am in quality singing, and to make some suggestions which would meet the above case.

Interesting Washing Exhibition.

Is Camden Town to Have a Society?

Sir,—Quite an interesting aud instructive illustration of the art of making fanciers—i.e., stimulating interest in cage birds—was afforded by Mr. Sam Smith, at the Stag's Head Hotel, Camden Town, on March 14. Mr. Smith is well known in London birdy circles as an expert in the art of washing birds for exhibition, but on this occasion he had succeeded in gathering together an audience of men and women who are not fanciers in the technical sense, but most of whom keep a song bird. Quite a large company assembled, and the proprietor of the hotel, who is devotedly attached to the breeding and exhibition of bull dogs, gave every facility to Mr. Smith for the purposes of his practical demonstration of how properly to cleanse a dirty bird. In response to invitation, one and another brought their "little birds" to be washed, and some of the birds were real "miners," and no mistake. They came dirty, but went away clean. So attractive and instructive was the demonstratiou made by Mr. Smith that already there are steps being taken to form a fanciers' society for that district, to include cage birds. The proceedings were diversified hy an excelleut musical programme, to the accompaniment of a blind pianist, who has pronounced ability as an instrumentalist.

One Who Was There.

The Early Chiff-Chaff.

Sir,—It might be of interest to some of your readers to know that I noticed the Chiff Chaff here (Carnalea, County Down) on Thursday, March 14. Although the Chiff-Chaff is a very early visitor, I think this is earlier than usual. I would also, while I am writing, like to thank your correspondent, Mr. F. Fishburn, for his information on the food of the Dipper. It is certainly a simple diet, but the bird must thrive on it; otherwise it could not have won a prize at the Palace.

Robert Cobain.

The Dipper's First Appearance on the Show Bench.

Sir,—Replying to Mr. C. Pickles' remarks about the first Dipper on the show bench, he is quite right in believing Miss Fishburn's bird was not the first. Mr. Mackwell, of Keighley, has exhibited a Dipper at least three times during the last three years at Northern shows. A friend of his exhibited one at Ayr (I believe) in 1908, and I also exhibited one in the same year, when a short article appeared in Cage Birds by "your humble.' Similar remarks then appeared about the "first Dipper on the show bench," but were corrected by a lady exhibitor, who stated through Cage Birds that she had exhibited the Dipper on two occasions four years previous to then. I do not suppose it would be stretching matters to say at least half-a-dozen Dippers were benched in 1908-9, all of which, I am proud to say, were sent from within a three mile radius of Miss Fishburn's residence, and were always in the prize cards. I shall be pleased to see reports of more birds reaching such an exalted position as Miss Fishburn's did. I, for one, intend to have a "flutter." I wish Cage Birds all success.

Chas. Shirley.

Sir,—In reply to Mr. Pickles about the Dipper at Halifax, I think that bird belonged to me; also I may say I exhibited one at North Shields some six or seven years ago, and a friend of mine, Mr. Chas. Shirley, sent one to St. Andrews, in Scotland, which took fourth prize. My exhibits did not even attract a mention, but, of course, when a bird gets first prize at the Palace it is more noticeable. I may say, too, that I exhibited a Dipper at Glasgow about three years ago.

Chas. Mackwell.

The Type of Present-day Winning Norwich Plainheads.

Sir,—I enclose herewith the "Eastern Evening News" of March 16, and under the notes on the Canary Fancy, by "J. E. N.," appears an account of a meeting held at "The Leopard Inn," when a speech was made by Mr. A. Woollard in which he referred to winning Norwich Plainheads at the last Crystal Palace Show. I thought his remarks would be interesting to your readers. I attended the Palace Show, but cannot in any way agree with Mr. Woollard regarding the exhibits he made reference to in his speech.

Novice.

"The members of the United C.B.S. held a very successful smoking concert, presided over by Mr. Fred Cullington. The Chairman gave the toast of "Our Judge," to which Mr. A. Woollard responded. He thanked the Chairman for his kind remarks, and also the fanciers for their kindness and courtesy. He was glad to know that some of the members attended the late great National Show, but was sorry to hear they were disappointed with the winners in the Norwich Plainhead classes as to type and quality—so much so that one of them remarked that he would not have the winners in certain of the classes in his bird-room. Fanciers connected with this society knew what type and quality meant, and would not return from London with all kinds of fairy tales. He was not surprised at this, as he had attended the Palace Show twice, and neither times had he seen better Norwich Plainheads than he had in our old city. He felt sure that the Norwich amateur breeders could hold their own with the amateur section of any other bird centre in England. He added that type and quality were his first consideration in judging, and be always felt unable to do with large, coarse-feathered, or coloured Crestbred birds, as many of them seemed nothing less. When going over a class of Norwich Plainheads, good heads and necks had no weight with him if they were on bodies of half-bred Yorkshires or Lancashires. They might perhaps do for cheap stock birds, if properly mated, and a fancier cannot afford to buy better. Neither could he see that the Bullfinch type is correct. In his opinion a Bullfinch head and neck set on a Robin-shaped body would be much nearer the mark. He impressed upon all the members to get as much size as possible, but not at the expense of type and quality."

The Suggested Norwich Plainhead Club for the Midlands.

Sir,—With reference to Mr. H. T. Collier's suggestion of a Norwich Plainhead Club for the Midlands, may I point out that the Norwich Plainhead Club deserves to be brought to the notice of Midland Norwich fanciers in preference to an entirely new concern. The Norwich Plainhead Club has already many Midland members, who take a large interest in its working, and who generally manage to figure on the list of special prize winners at the end of each season. Moreover, for some considerable time the club has allotted its patronage to at least one, and sometimes two, Midland shows, out of its five cup shows each year, for the encouragement and accommodation of the Midland Norwich fanciers, and the advancement of the Faucy in the Midlands. I hold no brief for the N.P.C., my only motive being the welfare of the Norwich fancy throughout England, but I think that the idea is much too prevalent that the Norwich Plainhead Club is a Lancashire club. This is not so. It is the original club to foster the breeding of the Norwich Plainhead throughout the British Isles, and in spite of growing competition, it still works for its object, and during the last few years has given patronage to shows all over the country, including Derby, Leicester, Gateshead, Wellingboro', Crewe, and London (L.C.B.A.). It would be much more to the point if Norwich fanciers generally and in the Midlands in particular, were to join the original club, so strengthen its hand, and at the same time partake of such advantage as no newly formed club can give for the same subscription. The Norwich Plainhead is still a progressive variety, and I should like fanciers to think of the Norwich Plainhead Club as a progressive association, ready, I am sure, to attend to any requirements of the variety if such are laid before it. If Mr. Collier will turn to his Cage Birds of March 16th, and refer to the result of the voting for the Norwich Plainhead Club officers for 1912, he will see that although most of the committee are representatives of Lancashire, the last three committeemen were elected by votes of 19 each or under, and consequently it would only require that many Midland fanciers join the voters to add such representatives to the committee as they wished; and as I stated earlier, there are already quite a number of N.P.C. members in the Midlands. If twenty Midland fanciers, instead of forming a weak new club, were to join hands with their more northerly brethren in the interest of the variety, I feel sure the result would be more satisfactory.

The R.S.P.C.A. versus Stapleton

Sir,—In view of the recent charge of cruelty to wild birds brought against my father, perhaps you will be kind enough to find space for a few words from me, as I think I can claim a little knowledge of his methods of treating livestock. I have been living here in Bournemouth for this last six months, so I was ignorant of what was taking place or I would have certainly made an effort to have been present to defend his honour. It was only on March 11 I became aware of it. As was stated in evidence, he has been established in his shop for 28 years, and we have been brought up entirely in the bird business (although I am not following that business here at present). Apart from our interest in the Fancy as a means of livelihood, I have always taken a very great interest in the Fancy pure and simple. I succeeded in breeding a Short-faced Tumbler which won first prize at the Dairy Show some four or five years ago, beating some of the best fanciers in England, besides winning several 3rds and 4ths at the Crystal Palace and most of the leading shows. I held the office of hon. secretary of the Short-faced Tumbler Club for five years, with the result that the club made very rapid strides (the letter enclosed from a well-known fancier will testify). I was very reluctantly compelled to give up the pigeon fancy. I then thought I would try my hand at mule breeding; the result was I managed to rear over thirty at the first attempt (many well-known fanciers in South London can prove this is correct). At Bournemouth I have got together 26 Norwich and Yorkshire Canaries, all in excellent health and breeding condition. I say without the slightest hesitation that the main cause of my success is the manner in which father has always impressed upon me the necessity to give them proper care and attention. Every morning as regular as can be every bird in his shop has fresh food and water supplied, and they are always regularly cleaned out two or three times a week if need be, which many people who are accustomed to visit the shop know only too well. Therefore I think scarcely anybody can believe for a moment the accusations brought against him by the inspector of the R.S.P.C.A. Personally I have a very great admiration for the objects of the R.S.P.C.A.; it is a grand institution, and is capable of doing a great amount of good if conducted in a proper manner; but it seems quite obvious that the object of these men who go round is to secure as many convictions as possible, and in their thirst for such they are not above stooping to the meanest practices. Think what it would have meant to some less fortunate shopkeeper, who had not so many kind friends to support him; there is very little doubt he would have lost the case, have been mulcted in heavy damages, and would have been looked upon as a disreputable character. In all probability, too, it would have meant the ruin of his business. Therefore I think most people will admit it is a very serious matter that such men should be allowed to go about unchecked; something ought to be done to bring home to them the serious nature of the work they are undertaking, for so long as they are allowed to run loose in this manner there is no telling what harm they will do.

Roller Canaries at the Crystal Palace Show.

Sir,—Please permit me to make a correction. In my letter to you of March 9 the sentence beginning "On Dec. 10, 1911" is an obvious mistake on my part as to date. The sentence should begin "On Nov. 21, 1911."

Is the Use of Sprouted Oats to be Recommended?

Sir,—May I ask readers of Cage Birds their opinion of sprouted oats as a food for cage birds? It is highly recommended by poultry fanciers for fowls; and as I was making use of some for my fowls I gave some to some hen Canaries, and they ate them almost as greedily as the fowls. The method of growing is well known—ordinary white oats placed in a box and watered every day until they grow about an inch long. I have never seen it recommended for cage birds, but would be glad to know the opinion of anyone who may have tried it.

Some Truths About the Scotch Fancy Canary.

Sir,—Mr. Smith remarks that the Scotch Fancy is a "bird of position, and has an attractiveness which can scarcely he claimed by any other member of the feathered tribe." Yes, it is a bird of position; but is this all? What about nerve and action? A Scotch Fancy without these latter would he useless, and would not deserve the name. The Belgian Canary is the bird of position, and is fully entitled to this name, for with position and shape combined you have got the "King of the Fancy," which title belongs to the Belgian and not to the Scotch Fancy, as Mr. Smith would lead us to believe. Coming back to the Scotch Fancy, of which I am a great admirer, I think Mr. Dunlop's price for a pair of good stock birds rather low, namely £5. I consider £8 a reasonable price, if you wish to breed high-class birds. I trust Mr. Dunlop's suggestions will he acted upon, and that a discussion will follow, both to the benefit of the bird and readers of your valuable paper, Cage Birds. Knowing Mr. Dunlop to he an Irishman, like myself, and both wishing to see this grand variety brought to a level with others, I trust Scotch Fancy admirers will fall into line and so help to bring the "Bird of Circle" up to the standard and numbers of some years ago. I am glad to see Ireland moving upwards in the birdy world; several new shows, and also some moribund ones (viz., Lurgan) again coming to the front—congratulations, Lurgan; more power to your elbow and best wishes for success.

A Proposed Cage Bird Club for Wood Green (London) & Dist.

Sir,—Kindly spare me a small space in your valuable paper, Cage Birds, to announce that a cage bird club is proposed for Wood Green and district. There are plenty of fanciers around here, and I think we should be able to form a very good club. Of course, I am already aware there is a club here, hut it is a mixed one, and I know a good many fanciers will not join same. I shall be glad to hear from cage hird men with reference to calling a meeting to draw up the usual officers, etc.

The Homing of the Starlings.

An Observation from Germany.

Sir,—At 5.30 this afternoon (March 18) I saw Starlings flying across the River Weser (Germany), and the number was estimated to he close upon a thousand hirds. I was told they had in all prohability migrated from Italy. They alighted in some fields, and appeared to my fancy fatigued, judging by the way they were flying; it was at the time blowing a keen easterly wind. I was informed that now was the time these hirds come over in enormous numbers. They are greatly encouraged to hreed here; in many places can be seen nesting hoxes with round holes, fixed to poles, trees, and walls. Last summer I noticed five of these hoxes fixed on a pole, and every one of them contained young. It was interesting to watch the parents going backwards and forwards in search of food.

THE YORKSHIRE UNION AND ITS METHOD OF BALLOTING.

The Challenge Accepted by Secretary and Scrutineers.

Sir,—In referenco to the letter in last week's issue of Cage Birds, signed by Mr. M. Skirrow, secretary of Bolton Woods C.B.S., relating to the results of the annual ballots, the accusations are of such a serious nature, and fraught with so much importance to the welfare and status of the Yorkshire Union of C.B.S., that I feel compelled to refrain from replying (much against my will), until the Council of the Union have had the opportunity of dealing with the charges and decided what course of action shall he taken. A meeting of the Council will be held at the Market Tavern, Godwin Street, Bradford, on Saturday, March 30, at five o'clock, when all delegates for the past year will ho post-carded to attend (this heing the last meeting of the old Council). After that I shall gladly accept the challenge as issued by Mr. Skirrow, and prove heyond a shadow of douht that the accusations levelled at myself, Mr. F. Hammond, and Mr. W. Blakey, the scrutineers of the annual ballot two years ago, are entirely unfounded, for I have in my possession every ballot paper returned to the scrutineers two years ago, and, of course, every one as they have been returned this time, and which the auditors of the Union will report upon at the Council meeting on March 30. In the meantimo any person interested shall have the opportunity of looking over the ballot papers for themselves by calling at my address.

Horatio Hill,
Hon. Sec., Yorkshire Union of C.B.S.

Sir,—We have noticed the challenge issued by Mr. M. Skirrow, on hchalf of tho members of the Bolton Woods Cage Bird Society and others, to what he is pleased to call the "governing body" of the Yorkshire Union. It is not our intention to deal with the matter at issue so far as the ballot for this year is concerned, feeling that in the capable hands of Mr. Hill this will receive all tho attention called for. But, after practically charging those concerned with having issued a false statement of the votes recorded, he says: "The same thing happened two years ago, when one person was credited with eight votes, but, as a matter of fact, the Bolton Woods Society recorded over twice as many for the same person. Theso were actually sent, as they were posted from the meeting." Now, sir, we do not know whether or not Mr. Skirrow and those members who unanimously voted that this communication should be sent to the public Press are aware of the seriousness of such a charge, but, if not, we can assure them that an ample opportunity will be afforded them of learning that a person's character, honour, and honesty cannot be defamed with impunity. As scrutineers of the Yorkshire Union ballot papers of two years ago, we demand to know on what authority Mr. Skirrow and his friends have attempted to bring dishonour and disgrace upon us by publishing what is much more than a mere insinuation that we returned a false record of the votes cast. We have given notice to the secretary of the Yorkshire Union to call his Council together, when Mr. Skirrow and those associated with him in these charges may rely upon their challenge heing accepted in no half-hearted manner.

Fred Hammond.
William Blakey.
Scrutineers, Yorkshire Union, 1910.

Sir,—I read with astonishment the letter concerning the above in your last issue. I notice that the writer challenges, on hehalf of his society, and, according to what what he says, on behalf of "several other societies," the governing body of the Yorkshire Union to puhlish the exact number of votes given by each society in the recent ballot. If the society in question desire to do any challenging, by all means let them do so, hut let them speak for themselves. I think he mentions he is voicing the views of about 200 members of the Union; as the membership of the Bolton Woods C.B.S. was only 22 last year, according to the Y.U. handbook, it would be interesting to know who the remaining 180 are on whose hchalf he is writing, and if he has got the proper authority for so doing. To me, and also to most fanciers to whom I have spoken in regard to tho hallot papers, they are drawn up in language simple enough for any working man of ordinary intelligenco to readily understand. If thero is any difficulty, it is because of the ridiculous suggestions which have to be placed on the ballot papers occasionally, on the suggestion of such societies as the Bolton Woods C.B.S. Perhaps the writer of the letter never saw in your issue of March 2, amongst the details anent the election of officers, etc., for the Y.U. for 1912, that the ballot papers of two societies had been incorrectly filled in, and were therefore void; perhaps this will affect his calculation a little with reference to the number of votes given. The letter to me seems full of insinuations of dishonesty and untruthfulness, for which I am convinced there is absolutely no foundation. If the society in question had any grievanee, they have their delegates, and the only proper and sportsmanlike way was to have the matter brought up at the next Y.U. meeting. Personally I am convinced that the writer is only "firing bullets" made by a very small clique of certain members of the Y.U. who have not the pluck to do so themselves. I wonder if they will now back him up? In conclusion, I would just like to add, lest it be thought by your readers that I am one of the officials of the Y.U., that I am not an official, and have never been one, hut I have a very high opinion of the fair and capable manner in which the affairs of the Y.U. are worked by its willing and never-tiring hand of workers. No doubt the matter will be taken up and properly dealt with at an early date by the Yorkshire Union.

A Nest Pan Bracket.

Sent by Mr. T. Beers, The Old Rectory, Swithland, Loughborough.

I send you a bracket or hanger I use for nest pans, which I find very useful, as it prevents the young falling out of the nest. Also it makes a good nest for hyhrid breeding, if a few holes are bored around the outside of platform and bits of evergreen or dried grass put in to form a screen. Have a piece of thin wood ahout five inches square. Mark a round hole in centre half an inch smaller than rim of nest pan. Cut a piece out by running the point of a penknife around mark, so that the nest pan drops loosely in. Nail triangle peice at back to form hanger.—Thomas Beers.

No. 578.
A Nesting Box for Foreign Birds.

Sent by Mr. A. H. Cotton, 3, Church Road, Sholing, Southampton.

I send you a sketch of a nesting box for foreign hirds. It is made from two flower pots. The hole in one is enlarged, and in the case of the other it is stopped up hy a piece of wood. The two are then cemented together and a piece of wire placed round them, forming a loop at the top to hang it up by. A small hole is then hored in one, and a stick inserted to form a perch.—A. H. Cotton.

Wild-Bird Life.

Notes on the Hedge Sparrow

Spring is advaucing, and already a few strange hirds have heen seen upon the Downs. Unfortunately, these were noticed by persons who are unacquainted with wild birds, or who only know them in a general way; but from what one can gather from rather imperfect descrfptions they are evidently some of our early spring visitors. Several species are due this month, but some of them, such as the Chiffchaff, are not easily noted. The latter is one of those small birds that are more frequently heard than seen. It is generally his double-note call that gives us the first indication of his presence.

At present the most conspicuous species in gardens, hedgerows, and furze-clad commons is the sober-pluinaged Hedge Accentor. Shy, and yet not particularly wild, the Hedge Sparrow spends tho winter is an everlasting hunt for grubs and seeds, varied occasionally by a little burst of music, rather high pitched in tono, but none the less welcome in the dull short days. He is a solitary bird during the early months, hut selects his partnor soon after Christmas. They wander together weeks before nest-building commences, although they are among the earliest of our smaller hirds to breed. They are unsociable birds, each pair keeping quite to themselves, although more than one may be nesting in the same hedgerow, almost in the same clump of bushes.

Hedgerows, low thickets, and dense bushes are the favourite nesting sites, although sometimes the nest may bo found in ivy clambering over old buildings or walls and palings. Few nests are prettier even before the lovely blue eggs are deposited, and when these are laid it forms one of the most beautiful pictures to be found in the whole range of ornithology. The birds are double-brooded, yet never appear to increase much in numbers. Their peculiar habits of creeping mouse-like at the bottom of hedges and round shrubberies and gardens expose them to dangers from ground vermin, which may possibly account for the depletion in their numbers considerably. The home of the Hedge Sparrow can never be confused with that of any other. The intense blue colour of tho eggs and absence of spots, combined with the open-sited nest, distinguish the species from all for which it is likely to he mistaken.

In the Courts.

AVIARY BROKEN INTO AT BURSLEM.

Conflicting Evidence; Sharp Sentence.

At Burslem Police Court on March 14 Percy White and Frederick Gratty, both of Burslem, were charged with stealing six birds and one cage of the value of £2, tho property of Henry Thomas Theohald.—The complainant, who is a collier, said about 9 p.m. on March 4 he locked up his aviary in the hackyard. The following morning, about eight o'clock, when he went to look at the hirds, he found six were missing, as well as a small cage. The four birds produced in court and the small cage were his.

Ralph Smith, North Road, Burslem, said at 11 a.m. on Tuesday, the 5th inst., the defendants came to his house and offered for sale a Goldfinch in the small cage produced, and a Canary. He asked them to whom the birds belonged, and Gratty said he had bought them. Witness gave 6s. for the two hirds and the cage. Gratty then said he had two more at home, and if he would lend him a cage he would bring them up. Later in tho day he (witness) purchased the other two birds produced for 3s. 6d.

P.C. Kettlety said he arrested Gratty at the Sneyd Colliery. On the way to the police offico he asked what he was wanted for, and when told "for stealing the hirds sold to Mr. Smith, of North Road," he said: "Oh! White bought them off a potter." Later in the day he arrested White, and charged him in company with Gratty with stealing the birds. White replied: "I helped to sell the birds. Gratty said he had them off an invalid at Dunn Bennetts, and had to sell them for 8s. What he got over he could keep. I had about 7s. of the money." Gratty replied: "I saw tho hirds in White's aviary on going to his house at 3.30 p.m. one afternoon last week. He said he had bought them for two pairs of hoots and some money. He asked me if I knew where he could sell them. A man told us to go to Smith's. We went there and White said: 'As you have run about with me, I will give you 2s. for your trouhle.'" White then said: "I deny that. He brought the birds and cage and put them into my aviary."

Both defendants pleaded not guilty.—White said ahout three months ago Gratty came to his house for lodgings. On the Monday night he returned about 11.30 with three hirds in his pocket, and a bird in a cage. Those produced in court were the birds. He turned them out into his (White's) aviary. The next morning Gratty said he thought he had a customer for the birds, and asked him (White) to go with him to sell them. They did so, and he (White) was given most of the money, Gratty saying it would go towards his keep.—Elizabeth White corrohorated. Her husband had been in all day, and was in all night on the 4th.

On oath, Gratty said he first saw the birds in White's aviary. He (White) told him that they were "the right sort of stuff," and added that he was going to crack a "good nut," and would tell him about it afterwards. They went to Smith's, and White sold two of the hirds. He sold two more later in the day. When they got back home White was smiling, and said he was going to send his wife to the North, with tho intention of following her.—They were each sentenced to two months' imprisonment with hard labour.—"Staffordshire Sentinel."

*All Good Friends.

Last year my father hand-reared a Magpie, and as it is tame he lets it out in the daytime It hops about the garden, destroying insects and worms, and is quite friendly with both dog and cat. My father often puts Mag's cage on the garden wall, and it gets into it and rests. When evening time comes tho bird goes to its cage, and my father takes it indoors.—Sent hy L. Davey (aged 12), 1, Henry Street, Plymouth.

*A Persistent Bird.

Georgo Stephenson, to whom we owe our railway system, one day closed a window at the top of his house, which had been for many days open, on account of the hot weather. Two or threo days afterwards a hird was seen to be beating against the window and trying in every way to break the glass. Stephenson opened the window, and watched to see what the bird would do. It flew straight to one spot, where a nest was afterwards found.—Sent by Alfred Ward (aged 15), The Stores, Church Street, Deeping St. James, near Peterborough.

Not to be Done.

A friend of ours had a Lorrikeet who was given a plate of porridge, and when it had eaten all the porridge near the edge, the problem was how to reach what was left in the centre without stepping on the plate, which it did not care to do.- Tho bird stood still while seeming to reflect, with wise head askew after the manner of oldor thinkers. Hurrying to its playthings, which happened to be at the ond of the room, it selected a matchbox, dragged it chattering along, ranged it precisely close to the plate, mounted it, and from the extra elevation sipped the last drop with a chuckle of content.- Sent by Mary Ford (aged 14), "Daphne," Elms Avenue, Eastbourne.

LOANHEAD AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

Meeting held Mason's Arms, Mar. 9. Mr. A. Jardine presided over a good attendance. Members then booked their hens, after which a number of well-known fanciers were proposed as judges, and secretary instructed to write them in turn. I hope to be able to publish the names in a short time. Mr. Hamilton (Eskbank) gave a very interesting exhibition of hand-washing. He first called fanciers' attention to the fact that a good brush was required, handing his own round, saying, you will find that it is made of real badger hair. He found it greatly helped to turn out a better washed bird than a cheap brush did. He preferred to use butter milk soap. He then caught his first bird and showed how he held a bird while washing it—head between finger and thumb, with the body lying across the palm of the hand. After lathering the soap freely, he started at tail and washed up over body, finishing with the head and neck, being careful to keep thumb away from neck after he had wetted it. He then took as much water out of the feather as possible with a sponge, then dried with a drying cloth, after which he rolled the bird up in a small piece of flannel and laid it on its back with its tail toward the fire. He allowed it to remain ten minutes or so before turning it into a cage to finish off. He washed three birds, and every one turned out well. It proved a good thing for the young fanciers, every movement being carefully watched. The chairman, in moving a very hearty vote of thanks to Mr. Hamilton, assured him he had got a wrinkle that he had never heard of before. The vote was very heartily responded to after which a few songs and stories brought a successful meeting to a close.—W. B. Smart, Sec.

STOCKSBRIDGE AND DIS. C.B.S.

Founder of the Society Honoured.

On Saturday a particularly interesting gathering took place at the Friendship Hotel, when the Stocksbridge C.B.S. met to give a hearty send-off to Mr. H. E. Wilkinson, of Stocksbridge, one of their members, who is leaving this country for Australia, also to present him with some little token showing their esteem and appreciation of the services he has rendered to the Society, which he founded, and had brought to its present excellent position. The chair was taken by Mr. W. Moore, who alluded to the good work done by Mr. Wilkinson. Not only had he been the founder, but he had been the heart and soul of their society. The present was a solid silver cigarette case and letter-case, bearing the inscription: "Presented to H. E. Wilkinson, on his departure for Australia, March, 1912, by members of the Stocksbridge and District Cage-bird Society, in token of their respect." Mr. G. L. Sampson, in expressing regret at the severance, asked Mr. Wilkinson to accept a small token of respect, which had been subscribed to by the members. He was only expressing the feelings of the members, who wished him every success in the land where he was going to make his home. Mr. Wilkinson tendered his heartiest thanks. He alluded to the pleasure he had derived during the time he had been amongst them, both at their meetings and shows. Whenever he took the case from his pocket it would remind him of his friends at Stocksbridge. He would still remain a member of their society and of the Sheffield Society. The health of Mr. Wilkinson was toasted with musical honours. Mr. Elliott asked Mr. Wilkinson to accept the letter-case as a token of esteem and respect from his old partner, for during the three years they had been associated it had been a real pleasure. Mr. Wilkinson, in accepting, thanked Mr. Elliott, and congratulated him on the progress he had made. He was leaving him with one of the finest studs of birds. He hoped Mr. Elliott would be as successful in the future as they (as partners) had been in the past. Songs were given by Messrs. H. Birkhead, W. Kilner, G. Milner, J. Foster, Mr. Ashton (London), and others. Mr. J. Foster proved an able accompanist.—G. L. Sampson, Hon. Sec.

NOTTINGHAM & NOTTS. O.S.

Heath, Esq., Norwich, W. Vardy, Esq.; Hybrids, British and Foreign, G. E. Weston, Esq. A table show of Crests and Norwich stock pairs followed. Our esteemed chairman, R. Rhodes, Esq., made the awards, which were well received. Competition was particularly keen in the Norwich section. Result: Crests, 1, Wolffe; 2, White; 3, Renshaw. Norwich: 1, Hill; 2, 3, Boaler. Criticism and discussion followed. Two new members elected, and a further three were proposed. Wilcock, Eccleshill; S. Smith, Keighley; J. Crowther, Bradford; J. Waterworth, Bradford; and W. Bearpark, Henston, nr. Leeds." Messrs. J. H. Towle (Queensbury) and E. Armstrong, Hon. Sec.

BROXBURN AND DIST. C.B.S.

Annual general meeting held Public Hall, Mar. 14, Mr. W. Murray presiding over a good attendance. Auditors, Messrs. Thomson and Murray reported books and receipts correct. Secretary submitted balance sheet for 1912, showing a balance of £3 15s. 4d., which was considered very satisfactory. Election of officers for 1912:—President, Mr. Murray; vice-president, Mr. Paul; secretary, Mr. McLaren; assist. sec. and treasurer, Mr. Thomson; committee (same as in previous years). Agreed, to hold annual show on our old date, Dec. 14, 1912, and to advertise our show in CAGE BIRDS. So that any intending to form new society should please note date to avoid clashing. Election of judges: for Scotch Fancy, Mr. McLennan (Edinburgh); for Border Fancy, Mr. Hislop (Stirling); Norwich and British (judges to be decided on next meeting, Mar. 28).—W. McLaren, Sec.

KENT COUNTY C.B.A.

Meeting held Barton Road Boys' School, Dover, Mar. 13. There was a good attendance, and evidence of a keen interest taken in the management. I hope this interest will be maintained throughout the year. Mr. E. E. Rayner presided. Letter read from Mr. Wickham (Chatham) acknowledging receipt of British bird cup, and expressing his approval of its design; also proposing that a suitably engraved memento, such as a silver spoon, or any useful article, be presented to members on returning cups for further competition; further, offering to head a fund for this purpose. After considerable discussion, it was unanimously agreed that something should be done in this matter, and if sufficient money was subscribed as a separate fund, there would be no objection. As an alternative, it was proposed to give diplomas. Matter held over until later in year, when a most accurate estimate of the resources of association can be given. Letter read from Sittingbourne C.B.S., applying for patronage for their show on Nov. 27 and 28. In June a list of societies receiving patronage will be published. Letter received from Mr. Wood (Hythe) containing donation of 4s. to cup fund, being the first to hand this year, and there are two cups to be provided, viz., Yorkshire and Lizard. Letter from Mr. G. Sanderson (late hon. sec.) acknowledging receipt of two guineas, which was voted him as an honorarium for past services, and wishing the association prosperity. Mr. W. Smith (Chatham) accepted as a member on the motion of Mr. Wickham. Buck up, Chatham, you are nicely situated for headquarters, and a periodical change round would be a step in the right direction. An animated discussion on "light Mule" breeding brought a most enjoyable meeting to a close.—A. Hendry, Hon. Sec.

COWDENBEATH C.B.S.

A Washing Exhibition.

Meeting held Arcade, Temperance Hotel, Mar. 16, Mr. J. Baxter presiding. There was a large turnout of members. Secretary read reply from Co-operative Society re hall for show. Agreed, to delay this matter till next meeting. Secretary instructed to reply to enquiry re special prize; owing to the strike it was agreed to leave the smoking concert over until after next meeting. After business, the chairman called upon Mr. J. Hutchison (Dysart) to give a washing exhibition. Mr. Hutchison explained his method. He used Pears "Lustrene" soap, and a camel hair brush, also showing how to hold the bird. He then washed two birds, and after wrapping them up, placed them in the drying cage, and hung a cloth (wrung out of hot water) over the front of cage; which he explained was perhaps the slower way, but he strongly recommended it as he was of opinion that by drying slowly he got the feather in better condition, whereas a bird dried quickly was very apt to be dry and hard in feather. Mr. Hutchison then asked if any member would like to try his hand at washing the third bird under his guidance. Mr. J. Reid volunteered, and made a very fair job of it. While the birds were drying questions were ably answered by Mr. H. The exhibition all through was closely watched, and afterwards the birds were handed round for inspection. On the motion of Mr. Reid, a hearty vote of thanks was accorded the lecturer for his kindness. Since the meeting, Mr. W. Grewar (Lochgelly), late of Forfar, has agreed to give us a demonstration with a patent drying cage on Mar. 27th, in the same hall, at 7 p.m., when we hope again to have a large turnout of members and friends. Three new members were proposed, Messrs. W. Robertson, J. McKiver, and T. Yates.—J. R. Reid, Sec.

BARROW AND DISTRICT C.B.A.

Meeting held headquarters, Mar. 13, Mr. J. Currie (president) in chair. After usual business, including date and schedule for Nest Feather show, had been discussed and adopted, a very successful table show of British birds was held, Mr. G. Large making the awards. Principal winners::—Messrs. West (Goldfinch), Fryer (Linnet). Questions were asked and answered by Mr. Large in a straightforward manner, greatly appreciated by the large number of members present. Decided, to bring this series of table shows to close next meeting night, Mar. 27, with a show of pairs for Mule or Hybrid breeding. Judging by the Britishers at this show, there should be some storming pairs for Mr. Davies (who was elected judge). Members are requested to note that nominations for Nest Feather show close next meeting.—J. S. Fleming, Hon. Sec.

NORTHERN YORKSHIRE C.C.

Annual general meeting held Feb. 29th, Mr. Crawhall in chair. Following officials elected: President, T. C. Crawhall, Esq.; Vice-Presidents, G. W. Cuthbertson, Esq., J. Curry, Esq., G. S. Ellwood, Esq., Mrs. Irwin Dees, J. Shepherd, Esq., Dr. Duncan O'Neal, T. Pearce, Esq.; Vice-Chairman, J. E. Atkinson, Esq.; Committee, Messrs. Wigglesworth, Hutker, Dix, Stewart, Tomlinson, Tweedie, Milne, Potts, Coomber, F. Johnson, Cattell, Mirley; hon. secretary, R. Tindale; auditor, Mr. J. E. Atkinson. Meeting adjourned until March 12th for secretary's report and balance sheet, as specials had not then come to hand. Mr. Crawhall again presided. Secretary presented his report on the year's working, which was considered most satisfactory. The membership had increased and there had been much greater support given to the patronage shows, both in champion and novice sections. The competitions have been most keen, not being decided until the last show. The members' table shows had also been a source of great interest, and a means of bringing members together; they had been well supported in the novice section and fairly well in the champion. The income was much in advance of any previous year, and the gratifying result of a balance in hand of £2 4s. 8½d. was considered the best feature of the year's working. A further donation of 10s. is promised, but not yet to hand. Decided, that a novice who gains his three firsts in novice competition may show in the champion section and the points gained shall count towards the novice special; this will do away with the handicap which the novice has had to contend with in the past. Also decided, that we ask societies requiring our patronage to grant three novice classes; this we can do with confidence of their getting well supported, as in the past our novice classes have averaged 19 entries, and with a better classification it is likely they will surpass this. Decided, that a member judging a show where our patronage is given shall be granted his average number of points.—R. Tindale, Sec., 141, Stanley Street, Newcastle-on-Tyne.

LEICESTER C.B.S.

A most successful meeting was held at Saracen's Head Hotel, Mar. 7th, Mr. Hawthorn presiding. The first business of importance was in connection with the provision of silver cups for competition among members. This show season we have had medals only, but it was thought desirable, in order to encourage the present members and to increase the popularity of the society, that for next season silver cups be provided for both Canary and British bird classes. Chairman volunteered to present the silver cup for the British if the members would find one for the Canary classes. This met with the approval of all, and it was decided to hold a whist drive to help towards the purchase of the 2nd cup. The question of the support of CAGE BIRDS LEAGUE was next considered. The Chairman spoke at length on the actions of faddists and extremists, who, under the guise of "humanitarians," were endeavouring to deprive the fancier of his hobby by making it illegal to keep a bird in captivity in any condition whatsoever. He said that CAGE BIRDS LEAGUE was formed to encourage the breeding and keeping of birds in cages in the proper manner and under healthy conditions, the furtherance of the Fancy in general, and the defence of our hobby against these faddists. Leaflets containing particulars of the LEAGUE obtained from the Secretary, Mr. Fulljames, were distributed to the members for their perusal, and having in view of the usefulness of such a union of fanciers, and the fact that the society is now in a strong financial position, it was agreed that any member of the society wishing to join the LEAGUE should pay 6d., and the society should pay the other 6d. This suited everyone, and fully 75 per cent. of the members gave in their names to become LEAGUE members, and it is expected that practically all will have joined by the next meeting. The meeting concluded with the usual table show, consisting of five classes, for Norwich Grecns, any other variety Canary, Open and Novice, and Pairs for Hybrid breeding. Classes were all well filled, and some exceedingly good birds were staged, especially among the Hybrids pairs.—G. H. Groocock, Hon. Sec.

SCOTTISH CRESTED C.C.

Annual general meeting held Nelson's Temperance Hotel, Ingram Street, Glasgow, Mar. 9th, Mr. J. Noble occupying chair. Owing, no doubt, to the restricted train service, occasioned by the coal crisis, only a very few of the members put in an appearance; consequently some important business received but a very half-hearted discussion. Financial statement for year considered; taking into account the liberal way the Club had catered for the benefit of its members at patronage shows, coupled with the regrettable deficit on club show, the balance in hand of 33s. 4½d. showed the majority of the members had responded loyally to the financial requirements. Balance sheet passed accordingly. Letters were read from Messrs. McNaughton (Larbert), Whitton (Broughty Ferry), and Mrs. J. A. Macqueen (Dollar). It was decided (by the Chairman's casting vote) to hold next annual general meeting in Edinburgh. A suggestion that we institute a "Novice" Cup, also adopt closed rings for current year birds, did not enlist any spirited interest from those present, and was consequently held over meantime. The long-delayed question of Club drinker again came up for discussion, and after the Secretary had produced a large and varied selection of samples, it was ultimately agreed to recommend a special hinged wire top drinker (2 patterns), Secretary being instructed to obtain information as to lowest possible cost of production, and report to Committee at first meeting. Also decided, to leave fixing of time and place for annual club show in hands of committee. Medals won during last season thereafter distributed. Following admitted to membership: Messrs. J. Boyle (Dunfermline), J. Watson (Wishaw), J. Brown (Kirkcaldy), J. Sneddon (Crossgates), W. Beaton (Kincardine on Forth), J. Brown (Bishopbriggs), A. McFadyen (Lanark), A. Smith (Inverness), J. Johnstone and W. Thornton (Kilmarnock), W. Griffiths (Glasgow), and Mrs. J. A. Macqueen (Dollar). Winners of club medals, 1911-12: Club show, gold medal for best young Crest, G. Mackie (Aberdeen); ditto, best young C.B., J. Young (Kilmarnock); silver medal, best old Crest, G. Mackie; ditto, best old C.B., J. Noble (Kilmarnock); Lochgelly, A. J. Howie (Dunfermline); Kelty, J. Veitch, (Winchburgh); Dunbar, J. Burns (Dunbar); Kilsyth, J. Sharp (Polmont); Dundee, J. Veitch; Dunfermline, J. Cram (Kilmarnock); Scottish National, G. Patterson (Bonnybridge).—J. Young, Sec.

TONG AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

Annual prize distribution held Hand and Shuttle Inn, Dudley Hill, Mar. 12. About 34 members and friends sat down to an excellent supper. After supper Mr. L. Hodgson, sen. (president) presented prizes to the successful competitors, namely, Messrs. L. C. Casey, L. Hodgson, sen., A. Gledhill, H. H. Clark, C. Padgett, J. Crabtree, O. Atkinson, and W. Walker. The musical part of the evening was provided by Mrs. Vi. Lucas, Messrs. T. Long, L. Walton, and W. Walker. On the motion of Mr. J. Firth, seconded by Mr. A. Gledhill, a vote of thanks to the host and hostess (Mr. and Mrs. J. Stocks) brought the most enjoyable evening of the society's career to a close.—W. Walker, Sec.

GATESHEAD AND DIST. C.B.S.

Meeting held Mar. 13th, Mr. Tindale presiding. Correspondence read. We considered the resignation of one of our members (Mr. Eastop), he having to go through a serious operation. Sec. was instructed to write Mr. Eastop expressing the sorrow of the members, and wishing him a speedy recovery. Judges for 13th annual show elected; voting result: Messrs. G. Harland, J. Robson, J. C. Barnes, C. Duncan, and J. Maddison. At next meeting Mr. J. Davidson, our new secretary, takes office, Mr. A. Holden having resigned through insufficient time. We hope our members will rally round Mr. Davidson, and give him all the support that lies in their power, and so help keep up Gateshead's reputation. We hope to chronicle another record show for 1912.—A. Holden.

NORTHAMPTONSHIRE (Hand-in-Hand) C.B.S.

Annual audit held Mar. 17th, 2.30, at "The Old House at Home," Wellingborough Road. Mr. S. G. Elte, chairman; Mr. A. Burrows, vice-chairman; Mr. A. E. Dunkley, treasurer; Mr. W. E. Allen, collector; and Mr. T. Brookes, of the committee, being present. Messrs. C. Gray and R. L. Wolpers, in a very able and masterly manner, conducted the audit. During the year 14 new members have been enrolled, two large shows have been successfully carried out, and the old debt from last year (caused by having all new staging, and other important alterations) has been wiped off. The accounts show a balance on the right side of £3 7s. 6d., which is considered most satisfactory. After the audit the treasurer invited the whole to a splendid meat tea. Thanks were accorded our host and hostess for their great kindness, also to our worthy President, W. H. Butlin, Esq. (former Vice-Consul for Spain), for taking so great an interest in the Society; same also was accorded to our vice-presidents and subscribers.—A. W. Law, Sec.

ROCHDALE (Good Intent) C.B.S.

Meeting held February 28th, headquarters, Toad Lane. We had our last show of the season, viz., a mating and judging competition, this time the big bold ones (Lancs.). Mr. G. Adams judged and gave satisfaction to the breeders of same. But when the non-experienced had a turn at judging, what a fall! Eventually the incident passed with a bit of good humoured chaff, and a pleasant evening was spent. Mr. T. H. Collinge won first, and Mr. J. Newell second prizes, given by the society. At a special meeting held March 11th, it was decided to run an annual amalgamated F.F. show on or about July 13th, to be a movable fixture to be decided by ballot. Following societies have signified their intention to join in the scheme: Rochdale Good Intent, Smallbridge C.B.S., Oldham C.B.A., Heywood O.S., Middleton O.S., and Bury C.B.S. This is an entirely new innovation as far as young birds are concerned, and will take place as soon as the members' shows are over in the radius. It will, I venture to predict, bring more members to the societies interested in the scheme. A further meeting will be held at Heywood on April 10th, to arrange matters.—T. Holt, Hon. Sec.

WALKLEY AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

Meeting held St. Philip's Mission Room, Westmorland Street, March 14th, Mr. T. Ridal in chair, supported by Mr. Butler and the treasurer and secs. The meeting had the misfortune to clash with others, consequently was not very well patronised. But what we lost one way we gained in another, novices coming in for something likely to benefit them in the breeding season. We decided on how many birds should count for our point special, the four highest awards being finally selected. Following new members enrolled: Messrs. D. Pickering and E. Sisson. Rest of evening was taken up by Sec. and Chairman in a lecture on breeding and general management, the Sec. taking the place of Mr. Woolhouse, who was engaged at another meeting. It proved a very instructive night, several of the older fanciers also giving their experiences. Sec. gave a paper on "The bird, from the egg to the show bench," also on the method previous to pairing up stock. Many were the questions put to him afterwards. The Chairman followed this up, ably, dealing also with the subject in masterly fashion. Next meeting, April 11th: Lecture on the Norwich Plainhead by Mr. J. A. Woodall. This gentleman is a very able lecturer, and we are hoping for a good meeting. All will be welcomed, at 8. We are forging ahead—22 new members this year. Old fanciers, remember your old society.—C. Tomlinson.

Nests of Birds, Poultry, etc., should be regularly sprinkled with KEATING'S POWDER, especially when hens are sitting. Don't forget to do this just previous to the eggs hatching, to destroy the Red Mite. Kills all insects. Harmless to everything else in any hobby is much to be desired, and in few hobbies is success so full of practical value as in that of bird-keeping. The question of outlay, either in time or money, is, however, very important, and your resources being limited, you are unable to rely upon your own experiences to teach you. There is no need to. If you are interested in Canary breeding and management, or the production of Mules and Hybrids, and aspire to success in either, you have the experiences, the invaluable experiences of others to aid you in

ITS REALIZATION

"OUR CANARIES," by Claude St. John, is a work on Canaries only, by an author who is perhaps the greatest authority on the subject living. A glance at the contents will show you how completely this great subject has been treated. By easy stages, Claude St. John, assisted by specialists in each variety, leads the reader from the very groundwork of the hobby to ultimate success, and the whole style of the writing is such that it can be followed

WITHOUT DIFFICULTY.

"CAGE-BIRD HYBRIDS," by Charles Houlton, is a complete guide to the fascinating but difficult hobby of Mule and Hybrid Breeding. The author has had 20 years of extraordinary success, and he shows you how to obtain the same success without meeting with any of the disappointments he had to encounter. Look at the contents of the work. Never was Mule and Hybrid Breeding so thoroughly treated before. The Editors of each work are C. A. House and G. E. Weston, the former an authority on Canaries and a present-day leading judge; the latter, known throughout the Fancy as a specialist on Mules and Hybrids, and Canaries.

Why go to the expense of buying winners when you can breed your own. All that is required is good stock birds and proper treatment of them. Which make the best stock birds, which varieties should be paired for breeding; what are standard birds; what is the procedure for breeding? "Nutshell" No. 23, "The Border Fancy Canary" will tell you. If you fancy this variety of Canary, get it at once, post free 2½d., from The Publisher, 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C.

ARE YOU LOOKING

for a Roller Canary? If so, your opportunity is here. I have just received a consignment of special stock birds from Leipzig. This consignment consists of 150 Bandmaster cocks and 150 hens of same strain, all of which have been specially selected for this season's breeding. They are in strong, vigorous condition, and ready for immediate breeding. Cocks are in full song, day and gaslight, with hollow and double rolls, sweet silvery trills, waterbubble runs, soft roulades, piccolo trills, jug-jug of nightingale, bell, harp, gong and flute notes, etc., etc. Price 10/- each, hens 3/- each, matched pairs 12/6. These Roller cocks have been carefully selected for their great variety of changes, and are not like the ordinary Roller with the long drawn out train whistle roll and full stop. Special Roller cabinet cages, with loose fronts and folding doors, 2/6 each; ordinary singing box cages 1/6 and 2/- each. I also have a splendid stock of pure bred, typical Norwich and Yorkshire cocks in full song, at 6/-, 7/6, 8/6 and 10/- each; hens 2/6, 3/6, 4/- and 5/- each; matched pairs, either Norwich or Yorkshires, 8/6, 10/-, 12/6 pair. Anyone requiring genuine stock birds at low price would do well to give me a trial, as I do not charge inflated prices for fictitious strains. All Canaries are sent on full week's trial at my risk, on receipt of cash or deposit system, and money refunded in full if entire satisfaction not given. As I guarantee safe arrival and take risk for a week after you have received bird, do not be afraid to send for one on account of curtailment of train service. This is last consignment of Roller Canaries I shall receive this season, so order now, or you may be too late.

to pay a visit to my aviaries on any day but Sunday. Every fancier, whether desiring to purchase or not, can be assured of a hearty Yorkshire welcome. You need not announce your visit. Just come, and it will be a pleasure to show you round.

I have the largest and finest collection of birds in this country, a collection well worth coming to see, as is testified by thousands of my visitors.

As regards the quality of my stock, I need only say that they have secured over 300 prizes during the 1912 show season, and all in championship classes. My customers have also had remarkable success with birds bred and sold by me, as testimonials I have here (filed for inspection) abundantly prove.

WINNING YORKSHIRES.

20/-, 25/-, 30/-, 40/- per pair.

I am now offering a few pairs Yorkshires, bred from and related to my winners, which have secured firsts and specials at all the leading championship shows in the country, including Scottish National and Crystal Palace. These birds are specially matched by me with a view to breeding winners, at the above prices. This is a unique opportunity for fanciers to introduce new blood (and that the finest in the country) into their bird rooms at a reasonable price. I have also a few grand lengthy birds at the following prices: Cocks, in full song, 6/-, 7/6, 8/6, 10/6, 12/6, 15/-, 20/- each. Grand racy hens feathered to perfection, at 3/-, 4/-, 5/-, 7/6, 8/6, 10/-, 12/6 each. Matched pairs, 8/6, 10/6, 12/6, 15/-, 17/6 per pair, in Clears, Ticks, Marked or Greens.

GRAND LARGE COBBY NORWICH, THE BULLDOG STRAIN,

This strain has won firsts and specials all over the country this season, including Bradford National and the Crystal Palace. They have also won the open Norwich Plainhead Club's trophy, also the Unflighted trophy, the Illingworth challenge cup, the Sandiford cup, F. Carl's trophy, etc., etc. It is a simple fact that I am now offering a few pairs of grand birds, bred from these winners, at 20/-, 25/-, 30/-, and 40/- per pair. This does not represent anything like their real value. Blood is sure to tell in the end, and this is a splendid opportunity for fanciers to start on the highway to success in breeding their own winners.

I have also a few good birds at any of the prices quoted for Yorkshires.

PURE SEIFERT ROLLERS.

in full rolling song by day or gaslight, 10/-, 12/6, 15/-, 17/6, 20/- each. Hens, same strain, 3/-, 4/-, 5/-, 7/- each.

GIANT SIBERIAN COCK GOLDFINCHES.

Real beauties, 7/6, 8/6, 10/6, 12/6 each.

CRESTS, CINNAMONS, ETC.

I have also now in stock some real good birds in the following varieties: Greens, Cinnamons (either Yorkshire or Norwich type), Border Fancies, Crests, Crestbreds, Lancashires, Mules, etc., etc.

Come and make your own selection but if you cannot come, don't forget to send a P.C. for my free illustrated catalogue, and remember I am prepared to send any variety you require on 7 days' approval at my risk absolutely, and guarantee you absolute satisfaction. Travelling cages 3d. extra.

Easy payments arranged with genuine fanciers and birds sent on receipt of first payment.

THE YORKSHIRE BREEDERS

Society do not claim to have won more prizes than others, but we do claim that a large percentage of the winners for which others get the credit have been bred by us or from our strains, which have been supplied to the leading exhibitors and dealers of Bradford and district. We intend these strains, which are of 40 years standing, to be distributed world-wide, instead of allowing two or three to monopolise the winners, which are bred from them year by year. Breeders who wish to breed their own winners will be well advised to take advantage of this genuine offer, and secure some of this blood at an early date, as not being dealers our stocks are limited. Breeding sets (1 cock and 2 hens), 12/6, 15/-, 20/- up; pairs, 8/6, 10/6, 12/6 upwards; cocks from 6/-, hens from 4/-; approval, cash or deposit: Address, "Secretary," 40, Springcliffe, Manningham, Bradford, Yorkshire.

Thirty Years of the Norwich Plainhead Fancy.

An interesting lecture delivered before the London and Provincial Ornithological Society by Mr. C. A. House.

On Thursday, March 21st, before a splendid gathering of the members of the L.P.O.S., Mr. C. A. House gave a lecture on the above subject. Dealing with the Norwich Plainhead Canary as it was when he first commenced exhibiting, in the year 1880, Mr. House traced its evolution down to the present day. At the date mentioned it was a much smaller bird than it is to-day, except that it was not so upright in carriage, it was very like the twentieth century Border Fancy. Its feather was very fine and silky, and it fitted its body like a glove.

"Prescot Norwich."

Shortly after this the men of the North introduced some foreign cross into their strains, and the birds shown in the Liverpool district became much larger in body and coarser in feather. They certainly had rounder and bolder heads, stouter shoulders and deeper chests, but they lacked completely that lovely quality for which the breed had always been famous. Finding themselves outdone in size, the men of the Midlands and the South introduced some of these "Prescot Norwich," as they were called, into their strains. The result was beneficial in every way, the improved type which was secured by the introduction of these Prescot birds at once commanded attention, but it was at the expense of the lovely feather qualities.

The K.N. v. Non-K.N. Warfare.

Shortly after this began the reaction against the K.N. feeding which had been in vogue for some ten years. Great and heated were the controversies in the Fancy Press as to whether K.N. pepper was or was not injurious to the birds. Learned doctors and veterinary surgeons took part in the fight, and some very hard knocks were given on either side, but after a long struggle, the honours lay with those who fought against the use of K.N., although many prominent breeders stoutly maintained that their K.N. fed birds moulted better, and went to nest earlier than did the non-K.N. fed ones. Therefore, for a time classes were provided at the shows for K.N. fed, and Natural Colour fed birds. This led to a lot of grumbling and complaining, because it quickly became apparent that fanciers were feeding the Natural Colour birds upon something stronger than seed and egg-food, and indeed they were. Many and varied were the articles used to obtain colour—marigold flowers, nasturtium flowers, carnation, clove flowers, beetroot, carrot, saffron, annato, cochineal, madder and port wine, logwood and other vegetable, and mineral colouring agents were all brought into use. The crisis came when Mr. W. A. Blakston at a show at Swansea in 1885 disqualified a number of birds. This action of Mr. Blakston's had much to do with the abolition of the Natural Colour classes, and the show classification then became K.N. fed and Non K.N. fed, and so it continued until the great Norwich Plainhead Conference, which was held at the Crystal Palace in 1890, and which was attended by several hundreds of Canary breeders.

The Big Birds Condemned.

This conference was really brought about because some of the birds which were being exhibited were too big, too coarse in feather, and had little to recommend them except colour, as after the introduction of the Prescot blood the birds got larger and larger, until they had departed far from the old-fashioned Norwich. Just about this time came the introduction of other feeding methods, and the Non-K.N. fed birds were fed not with the ordinary red Natal cayenne pepper, but with the deep yellow Nepaul cayenne. The first recipes, that is, properly balanced quantities of the various colouring ingredients, were given by the lecturer to the Fancy in the columns of "Small Pets," which was then the only paper catering to any extent for cage bird lovers. Shortly after the Crystal Palace Conference came some talk of a specialist club for Norwich Plainheads, and in a short time it materialised, to be followed later by the Scottish, Southern, and other clubs all working for the benefit of breeders of the variety. The work, the good work, which those clubs have done is known to all, and to-day we have more truly typical well feathered Norwich Plainheads than ever.

In the eighties, said Mr. House, the great breeding centres were Norwich, Plymouth, Nottingham, and Northampton, Coventry, Leicester, but of these only Plymouth had held its own, and to-day there were some of the best Norwich Plainheads in the kingdom in the western port. He gave some highly interesting personal reminiscences of the olden times amongst the breeders of the towns named.

Breeding Problems.

Dealing with the breeding of the variety, Mr. House said he did not advocate the pairing up of young birds, as he was convinced that birds which were allowed to run over the first season bred stronger and better-shaped birds than did those which were paired up before they were twelve months old. Colour and quality of feather both came largely from the use of green blood, and the breeder who would be successful should never forget this fact. Many breeders were of opinion that the predominant partner was the cock bird, but, said the lecturer, England's sons have derived all that is best and good from their mothers, and there was not the slightest doubt that the breeder who looked well after his hens was the most successful. Size and colour undoubtedly came from the cock, but shape and quality of feather were invariably imparted to a strain by the hens, and no strain ever became lastingly prominent in which the selection of the hens was made a secondary consideration. One point in particular was influenced by the hens, and that was head. Many otherwise good Norwich possessed poor frontals, and the only way in which a strain possessing such a fault could be improved was by selecting hens with goood width and rise of skull.

Wild-Bird Life.

A Favourite Nesting Site.

The mildness of the winter months has been so pronounced that there has been very little cessation of wild birds' song since the autumn. The Song Thrush has, of course, been the chief performer, assisted by the Robin, Skylark, Hedge Sparrow, and occasionally the Blackbird. The last-mentioned bird is somewhat a puzzle as regards his singing. Most birds will give us some of their best music during their early courting days, and will warble for many weeks before there are any signs of their going to nest, but the Blackbird is not by any means so prolific in song, and frequently the winter will pass without a single note from him; but when he has paired, and perhaps commenced to build, and his yellow bill has a decided orange hue, we hear his glorious melody sounding over field and woodland.

Considering what a shy winter performer he is, it is rather surprising that he should be such an early builder. Many homes are made before there is a sign of leaf on the hedgerow. He frequently shows his wisdom by selecting some holly or laurel bush for his first attempt. One is now building in a niche in the old park wall near the writer's house. This same site has been selected by a pair of these fine birds for several successive seasons. The species is so plentiful that one can hardly affirm that it is the same pair which selects this cosy nook. It is well known that Blackbirds become firmly attached to the same locality, and that during the season the same nest will be frequently used for a second and even a third clutch of eggs, providing the birds are left unmolested. It is, therefore, quite possible these are the same birds that used this sheltered site last season, or at least one of the pair with a new partner.

The writer is inclined to think that many more species return to the same spot to incubate than naturalists generally give them credit for. And why not? If the long winged Swallow can travel thousands of miles between autumn and spring and can spend the interval in fresh scenes, and among a different fauna, returning afterwards to the same village to nest under the eaves of the old cottage where last autumn's brood was reared, other birds' memories and love of home should be equally as strong.

The Blackbird's Ways.

A peculiar habit of the Blackbird is to lift his tail and drop his wings as he alights. This he invariably performs, although only for a moment; but in the spring he will alight and strut about the lawn with his wings down and tail almost erect, especially if his partner is present, or a rival is anywhere handy.

Suet as Preventive of Egg binding.

Many hens succumb, especially in the early stages of the season, to egg-binding. When pairing up your birds, get some best mutton suet and tie a piece to the cage front. You will find the hens peck freely at the suet. I have not been troubled with egg-binding since I adopted this method.—F. C. Sims (Barnsley).

Rearing Young Foreigners.

Knowing the trouble sometimes experienced in rearing young foreign birds, I send along the method of feeding which I have personally used with the greatest success. Take one hard-boiled egg, finely chopped, six biscuits crushed to a powder (butter fingers, I use); crush equal parts of best Spanish canary and white millet to a powder (well sift to separate husks); take one teaspoonful of the powder, and well mix with the egg and biscuit, adding one teaspoonful of fresh ants' eggs. Mix the whole thoroughly together, and feed in the ordinary way.— Percy J. Jamieson, 64, Westfield Road, West Ealing, W.

The Ready-made Nest.

I find it a good plan to supply my Canaries with a nest already made. I form the nest with cowhair or any other suitable material, then put in a round hot stone (about 2½in. in diameter). When cold the nest is perfectly formed, and most hens take to them directly, if ready to nest. Some will pull them to pieces, but for this I find a few small feathers in the cage for them to toy and play with will prevent it.—R. M. Presland (Woodford Green).

Teaching Them to Keep the Perches.

We are often troubled with birds going on to the cage bottom, Linnets especially, instead of on to the perches. To prevent them, select a cage from which you can run the bird out through the slide to another compartment; then make a box two inches deep to fit the cage within two and a half inches from the front; next get a tin made to fit the box, one that will hold water, place the tin in the box for support, put the box in the cage, and fill it one and a half inches deep with water. Then cover the water over with husks, so that the bird cannot see it. After replacing the perch for seed and water, and the front, draw the slide and let your bird into the cage again. He will take his usual drop, and he goes straight into the water. You will find he will not repeat it very often, but will stick to the perches rather than constantly drop into the water. The husks being on the water, he will not know whether the water is in or out.—A. Wellings, Salisbury Street, Prescot.

Helping the British Birds.

Now is the time to push on the British birds with which you intend breeding. Dandelion pods are to be got from the sunny side of banks and hedgerows; they are now white tipped. Give three or four daily. Cut off the white fluff, which only makes a mess about the cages. Give also a little egg food daily, and a sprig of flowered groundsel twice a week. This will put them in breeding condition.—W. H. Cummins (Exeter).

How a Canary Helps Mule Breeders.

Now that the breeding season is near, a hint to beginners starting at Mule breeding might help. I was very unlucky as a beginner, but experience teaches, and experience has taught me that sometimes more than a cock Finch and a hen Canary are required in order to produce Mules. My hint is to have a cock Canary in full loud song. Take him into the breeding room, and hang him out of sight of the muling pair; then, if he is in full, loud song, and the Finch is in breeding condition, you will have fertile eggs. This is the way I first succeeded. This year I have a hen Canary sitting on four eggs. She is paired with a Goldfinch. Three of the eggs are fertile, the song of the cock Canary being the sole cause.—James Porter, Newtown, Cunningham, Co. Donegal.

Preparing Biscuit for Egg Food.

Those fanciers who prefer biscuit for making their egg food will find this "tip" useful. Place the biscuits, about half a pound at a time, in a linen bag, or wrap them loosely in a cloth, then pass them several times through the domestic mangle, tightening up the rollers a bit each time you pass them through. This reduces the biscuits to powder far more effectively than rolling or pounding, and saves an enormous amount of time and labour. Several pounds can be done in half an hour, and stored in tins for future use.—A. W. Farmer (13, Thornhill Road, Leyton).

Hybrid Breeding between two British Birds.

By THOS. SMITH (Glasgow).

A lecture delivered before the members and friends of the Vale of Leven C.B.S. on March 7th.

IN response to an invitation from your esteemed Secretary, Mr. McLean, I have pleasure in coming amongst you to read this paper on the interesting hobby of small hybrids. You are aware that hybrids are bred from two birds of different species, and that until a few years ago it was only a bird breeder here and there who took a special care of this particular section of our Fancy. Now, hybrid breeders are legion.

The Goldfinch a Popular Subject.

The Goldfinch has been a favourite among caged British birds as long as I can remember. He has bred freely with the hen Canary, by which means long lived songsters are produced. The Goldfinch Canary Mule makes a splendid house pet. Even at this date he is not known as he should be.

The wide spread introduction of the Bullfinch hen has increased the popularity of the Goldfinch and as a Hybrid producer he has become famous. We scarcely visit an exhibition of importance but we have the gratification of gazing on two or three of those "living pictures," rich in colour and lovely in plumage; the feathering of both parents is beautifully blended in the young. Of course, as in everything else, there is a superiority or inferiority in quality that is brought out chiefly in the management or mismanagement by the owner in the process of colour-feeding. A very great deal depends upon the quality and administration of the egg and colour mixture; that, however, is a matter which will be dealt with more particularly later on.

The Goldfinch should be mated to a large Bullfinch hen, that is a Siberian Bullie. It is a decided advantage in fact to have both parents Siberians, as Siberians in both cases are larger than Britishers.

The Much-prized Redpoll-Bullfinch.

Our forefathers would have laughed had they been told that the tiny Redpoll would be a hybrid producer with the Bullfinch, but it is an accomplished fact. True, they are rare, and on that account are prized; and they are persevered with in unlooked-for quarters. I would like to see, or hear, of greater success in the efforts which are put forth in this department. In my opinion, a light British Bullfinch hen is most suitable. So far as my acquaintance has gone the successful fanciers have mated the British hen with the Redpoll (Lesser or Mealy, as either produces the much coveted prize winner). Properly moulted and colour-fed, the Redpoll-Bullfinch is very often a successful competitor in the keenest of competition.

A Cross to Hold Its Own.

Four or five years ago it was considered a rarity to breed the Canary-Bullfinch Hybrid, and when it was obtained it was placed in the very front as much on account if its rarity as for its merits. More recently in one year there were no fewer than a dozen Canary-Bullfinch Hybrids throughout England and Wales at the various shows, and it was instructive to follow their movements on the show bench week in and week out. Needless almost to say, they were successful, and all things being equal this class of hybrid is likely to hold its own.

At this stage I think I cannot do better than exhibit before you one of the most complete pictures ever presented by that enterprising weekly CAGE BIRDS. It is the supplement to the issue of 12th February, 1910 and it is entitled "A triumph of the Hybrid Breeder." A yellow cock Canary and hen Siberian Bullfinch, with their progeny, the rare and valuable Canary-Bullfinch hybrid cock and hen. The hen hybrid is uppermost and very much paler in plumage than the cock, who is a charmer.

Would you, my friends in the Vale of Leven, like to have four of this kind? It is worthy of a trial. Get a nice yellow Norwich cock, and an ideal hen Siberian Bullfinch. Put them into the same cage early in March, and exercise patience until the end of April. Then put them into the breeding cage and you will be astonished one morning to see the hen rushing about with the twigs or grass with which she is supplied. She does nothing by half-measures in building operations; she is most assiduous, and as a rule has no equal in the laying of eggs, laying in one season as many as 50 to 60 eggs.

Our Hon. Sec. List.

This week's addition to our list of Local Hon. Secs. is as under:—

Tonbridge and Dist.:—Mr. Thos. Smithers, High St., Hadlow, near Tonbridge.

The Membership Roll.

I have once more the pleasure of announcing a substantial addition to our list of members, and, as will be seen by the letter published below, I am in receipt of a cheering promise that yet another Society, the Attercliffe and Dist. C.B.S., is intending to support the LEAGUE in its work. The following are the names of the new members:—

Mesdames Browne, Dartford; Elliott, Ramsgate; Soames, Bromley; March, Upper Clapton; Payne, Stoke Newington. Messrs. Bunyan, Brixton; Cosby, Blackpool; Mead, Bath; Moss, Battersea; Gregory, Darlington; Stapleton, Rotherhithe; Cane, West Ealing; Roberts, Bloomsbury; Perry, Deptford; Smithers, Hadlow; Grimwood, Deptford; Barlow, Greenwich; Thomas, Ramsgate; Jinks, Sheffield; McSorland, Lugar; Bibby, Peterborough; Neville, Nottingham; Rhodes, Bradford; Williams, Ashbourne; Koch, Walthamstow; Gant, Acton; Davison Bishop Auckland; Downs, Manchester; Young, Misterton; Greenway, Creed, Cross, and Loveland, Tonbridge; Turner, Colne; Payne, Stoke Newington; Evans, Chesterfield; Hoey, Somerton; Afrigan, Ramsgate; Miller, Sunderland; Culpeck, Ilford.

A Promising Letter.

Mr. G. A. Watson, lately Hon. Sec. for Parkgate, and now of Attercliffe writes as follows:—"I am very pleased to be able to report that after the next meeting of the Attercliffe and Dis. C.B.S. I shall be able to send up about a dozen new members." This is the kind of support which CAGE BIRDS LEAGUE needs.

A Sentimentalist's Letter.

A member sends me a letter recently published in the "Belfast News Letter," which in a sample of those to which I referred last week as appearing from time to time in local papers, and which, absurd as they are, serve to show that maudlin opposition to bird-keeping is rampant in the land. The writer of the epistle in question is good enough to say that "Some birds seem suitably constituted for confinement, and, therefore, appear to be content in cages, such as the Canary and Parrot." For his admission we must, I presume, be sufficiently grateful, but the writer goes on to express the doctrine that "the wild Lark and grey, being differently constituted, appear to suffer continual mental anguish in their prisons.....A large percentage of them die within the first few days from sheer mental anguish."

This is the kind of piffle to which we have grown accustomed in the journals of the professional humanitarians, and which bears its own refutation with those who know anything of the subject of bird-keeping. When it strays from the columns of such papers as depend for their being upon the support of the subscribers to sentimentalist societies, and appears in more widely read local organs, members of our LEAGUE should take the opportunity of refuting it. The task is an easy one, but it is none the less necessary, and it is our duty, whenever occasion arises, to expose the absurdity of the doctrine preached by these ignorant critics. I am glad to know that many of our members are replying to such letters when they see them in their local papers. In this particular case it would be interesting to know wherein the "wild Lark and grey" are "differently constituted" to the "some birds" which are credited by the writer of the precious effusion as being "suitably constituted for confinement." Is not a Parrot as much of a wild bird in its native country as a Lark in ours?

League Leaflets in Trams.

A suggestion as to how members may help to spread the knowledge of the objects of CAGE BIRDS LEAGUE comes from Mr. A. Wilkinson, Hon. Sec. to the LEAGUE for Colne, Lancs. Mr. Wilkinson, in writing for a fresh supply of our leaflets says that he is in the habit of placing them on vacant seats in trams. He says he finds that openings for conversation result, and opportunities of explaining the reasons for the existence of CAGE BIRDS LEAGUE. It is of course quite unnecessary for me to say that a supply of our leaflets will be sent post-free to any member who chooses to apply.

Our Prize Medal Scheme.

I have received a number of letters expressing appreciation of the announcement of last week that during the forthcoming season gold, silver, and bronze medals would be offered for competition among members of CAGE BIRDS LEAGUE. The idea was suggested by several members, and I am pleased that it has been so well received. One of the members making the suggestion was Mr. W. Downing, of Manchester. His letter ran as follows:—

I would like to make the suggestion for this next year that we go in for CAGE BIRDS LEAGUE medals—one in gold with an enamel centre, similar to the centre group in our LEAGUE badge; remaining medal to be of silver with the same enamel centre, to be competed for among LEAGUE members at any shows instead of value prizes such as have been competed for this last season. Of course, the medals would be given only where the number of members competing brought the value about right. I think the medals would prove very popular, and would soon be in many hands—or, rather, in front of many waistcoats. They would catch the eye, enquirers would be many, the wearer would tell the tale, converts would be made, and members added to our LEAGUE from every part of the kingdom, to say nothing of the eager interest there would be at the show itself in trying to capture a medal. The cost of one cup, which could only be won by one member in one year, would provide many medals, many winners, and would result in many more people getting to know our LEAGUE, our members, and our objects.

Manchester. W. DOWNING.

I hope very soon to be able to announce the conditions under which these medals will be offered for competition. The number given at any show will depend upon the number of members of the Society holding the show who are at the same time members of CAGE BIRDS LEAGUE, and the competition will be strictly confined to our members. It only remains for Societies to support the League. The medals to which they will become entitled may be allotted entirely at the discretion of the committee of the show at which they are offered for competition.

GRANGEMOUTH AND DIST. O.S.

Meeting held March 1st. President (Mr. D. Smart) presiding over a fair turnout of members. Decided to change our meeting place to the Rechabite Hall, as we are able to engage same for every fourth Wednesday, commencing April 10th. Also agreed to hold our F.F show on July 20th. Will any fanciers in the district desirous of joining kindly communicate with me, and I will give them full particulars. We made two new members in Messrs. M. Payen and D. Stevenson.—J. NORTH LONDON C.B.A.

A very interesting and successful British and foreign bird show was held at headquarters, 20th March. The quality of the exhibits generally was well up to the high standard this Society has set. Special mention must also be made of the creditable way in which all the exhibitors staged their birds. The number of entries was very satisfactory; in fact, somewhat exceeded expectations. Mr. P. W. Jefferies, the new Hon. Sec., had everything well in hand, and seems to be settling down to his new post very comfortably. Mr. G. Mortlock, the popular chairman, conducted the meeting with admirable ability, and invited all present to put any questions they wished to the judge, Mr. A. J. A. Marley. Many took advantage of this offer, and were ably answered, after which a very hearty vote of thanks was accorded to Mr. Marley for his services, also to Mr. Mortlock as chairman.

We have received a splendid sample of egg and biscuit food from Mr. E. J. Grain, seedsman, etc., Grey Friar Gate, Nottingham, which we think should prove a good substitute for hard-boiled egg, and one which will meet with approval from those on the look-out for an article of this description.

Secretaries and others are asked kindly to note the following changes of address: Mr. C. Barring, from Camberwell, London S.E., to "The Hedgerows, Mountnessing Road, Billericay, Essex: Mr. Harry Howard sec. Walkden and Dis. C.B.S., from Worsley to 50, New Earth Road, Walkden, near Manchester.

Societies receiving our patronage will have to guarantee the following.—Sixteen classes for Norwich, four money prizes per class to the amount of 22s. They will also have to select one of the club judges. The committee meeting has been postponed owing to the coal strike.

We have received a "trilup" feeder, an excellent appliance for hand-feeding young birds, from Mr. C. H. Goodman, Bedford Road, Kempston, Bedfords, and can thoroughly recommend it to the notice of our readers. Mr. Goodman writes: "I myself reared thirty birds in two years with this feeder, and received numerous letters from customers last season appreciating the idea. You can feed a nest of young birds about ten times quicker than two parent birds can. The food goes into the crop just like a nibbler, and can be easily digested, because the appliance will not pass any in lumps. Fanciers who fill up the crops of their young birds every evening will find an extraordinary difference in the youngsters' condition in the morning whether the hen is feeding or not."

I have taken over the secretaryship of the Ealing and Hanwell Fanciers' Society, and shall be pleased to hear from and give particulars to any fancier who might like to join, writes Mr. Rowland Bamber, 78, Whitestile Road, Brentford, Essex. Radius, ten miles of Hanwell Public Library. We have challenge and points cups for each section, so can ensure good competition.

We were delighted to see the picture of our young Crested hen on the front page of Cage Birds last week, and we wish to thank you and Mr. Norman for it, write Messrs. Greenwood and Burson (Swindon). Also, we would like to thank all who have sent us congratulations, of which we have received a great number. I can assure you there has been a great demand for your paper here this last week. In answer to many enquiries as to how our hen is bred, we may say that she is bred from a wing-marked dark Crested cock (two years old) and a clear Crest-bred hen (one year old). She is a strong healthy bird, and promises to make up into a grand specimen.

On March 22 a Canary belonging to Mr. Alexander Strachan hatched out four young birds—Norwich Canaries—from prize-winning stock, says the "Aberdeen Evening Gazette"; this is very early hatching. The young birds are all alive and healthy.

I am giving up my Norwich solely for domestic reasons, and most reluctantly, as I was doing remarkably well with my birds, winning in the open novice section at the recent Palace Show with a fine young buff of my own breeding, writes Mr. C. E. Bown (Kilburn). All must go, and are being advertised this week. Perhaps, in the course of a year or so, I may be able to take it up again. I hope so: "Once a fancier, always a fancier," you know.

This lecture will be entirely free, and the L. and P.O.S. heartily invite brother fanciers or anyone interested in birds to be present, when they may be sure of a warm welcome.

Under Protection.

I think readers of your valuable paper will be interested to know that one of our Grantham fanciers, Mr. Bond, has a Thrush sitting on top of some peasticks in his garden; also in his tool-shed a Tit has built a very nice nest. This nest is made of moss that had been collected for the coming breeding season and put there to dry. There is just room to put your finger in. He is taking great care that no one shall interfere with them, and hopes they will bring their young up with him, as he is very keen on wild bird life.—W. Ratcliff (vice-chairman, G.C.B.S.).

Poor Polly!

Scene: A bird-washing exhibition. Speaker: A middle-aged lady who has a Parrot. "Bless me! Never saw anything like it in my life! See how clean the bird looks; and my Polly is very dirty!" At the next meeting of the club this lady was again present, enquiring after the "gentleman who washed the birds." Said she: "He said it was very easy to wash a bird; and I thought so. But Polly's dead. I washed her to get her clean, and I've come to-night to ask the gentleman if he cannot tell me how to wash her to life again. She was in a mess; soap all over her. I did as the man said—I got a nice lather on! But just as I thought I was going on fine, Polly bid me good-bye."

OUR HOBBY AND THE COAL STRIKE.

A Helping Hand to Bird-keepers affected by the present Industrial Trouble.

We realise that by reason of the grave labour trouble which is affecting the mining industry of the country, and through this a large body of workers connected with other industries, many bird-keepers and breeders must find themselves hard hit financially, maybe so badly as to prevent them advertising their surplus breeding stock in our columns, and so finding the best markets. We are anxious to lend a helping hand to fanciers who find themselves in this unfortunate position, and have decided to institute a special advertisement rate for their benefit until such time as the present trade dispute comes to an end.

From all bird-keepers thrown out of employment by reason of the coal strike we will accept undisplayed advertisements of surplus stock at one-half our usual rate.

The only condition we make is that the sender of the advertisement gives the name and address of the colliery or other works at which he was employed up to the time of the strike, closuring his means of livelihood. This is for our private information, as a guarantee of the bona-fides of those taking advantage of this offer.

Note.—This offer is not open to advertisers generally, but only to bird-keepers thrown out of employment by the coal strike.

To advertise in "CAGE BIRDS" means immediate sales.—So writes Mr. C. A. O'Reilly (Dublin).

I would require a special postbag to hold what answers came from my last advertisement in "CAGE BIRDS," writes Mr. Spencer, of Brosna, Roscrea, Ireland.

I have had too many replies to my advertisement in "CAGE BIRDS" (re exchange for Yorkshires) to be able to answer all. I hope those who wrote will accept this explanation.—J. Wright (Birmingham).

I have to thank "CAGE BIRDS" for the sale of my birds. I have had numerous letters in reply to my advertisement in "CAGE BIRDS." I have been a weekly reader for more than five years. I wish "C.B." every success in the future.—P. Andrew (Whitemoor).

Ought Closed Rings to be Abolished?

Our correspondent holds that they are dangerous to small birds and bring about disastrous losses in the breeding Season.

Sir,—I always like the clear and fearless way in which our well-known friend, judge, and fancier, Mr. C. A. House, tells us his views when he has anything to say about Fancy matters and it is not often I find myself in disagreement with him, but when he goes out of his way to recommend the use of closed marking rings for Canaries (as happened recently in your columns) then I feel I must have my say to the contrary. I have had a rough experience through using these closed rings and I think that worse advice could not be given than to recommend a bird breeder to go in for them. The idea sounds all right, for it is a good thing to be able to trace without mistake how a bird was bred, and that is how it seemed to me when I first decided to try it, but in practice I soon found my mistake out, though it cost me some young birds before I gave in, convinced that closed rings were no good to the Canary breeder. I say they are most dangerous things, that can cripple and spoil a young bird, or be the cause of its death at the hands (or beak) of its parents, though it is generally the fancier himself who is responsible for the crippling part. It is next to impossible, I hold, to put closed rings on to young birds a week old without damaging a toe now and again, such as causing a "slip claw" (breaking it) and so spoiling the carriage of the bird, even though you are an expert fancier and use every care. What the job must be to a beginner I can well imagine. If the birds are not done at this age, then the ring cannot be got on to the leg. Then when you have got it fixed, it is almost sure to attract the attention of the hen, who perhaps thinks it a bit of dirt; anyway in most cases she tries to remove it and usually ends by pulling the youngsters out of the nest on to the cage floor, when if you are not close by, but out at your work, they stop there to starve. I have had hens do this time after time. Others will so peck the youngsters legs trying to get off the ring, that they start them bleeding, and once the hen or cock begins this game it leads to the toes being eaten off, and worse things. Birds which "worry" youngsters in this way never seem to forget it, but do it again and again. I am not speaking for myself in this either, for some of my mates tell me they had the same thing happen when using closed rings. It is different when one puts on the split (or open) rings after the young have left their parents. If this is done late in the evening, by the next morning the birds have become used to the strange things on their legs and go on all right. Of course, the removable rings are not proof against fraud, if anyone wants to practice it for their own purpose, but there are plenty of honest fanciers; and anyway I know that I for one am not going to risk losing or spoiling youngsters from my best birds for the sake of using closed rings—good birds are too hard to get and you never know which one in the nest is going to be your best, perhaps win you cups or bring a big price. I respect Mr. House's opinions, as I have said, but to show him that others beside myself know that there is a dark side to the picture, I wish you would print the following remarks recently passed by Mr. John Robson (who is also a noted judge and authority) upon the use of closed rings.

"Some people seem to think it is extremely simple to put a closed ring on a young bird's leg at the age of seven days. I think Mr. Heath and myself were the only members at the C.C.C. meeting who have had any experience in the use of closed rings, and I am afraid it is not too easy a task to ring young Canaries with closed rings. The open rings, of course, are quite simple. . . . The ringing of pigeons with closed rings has been cited as an argument in favour of ringing Canaries; but to make comparison between a young pigeon and a young Canary is hardly reasonable. The pigeon's body at that age is larger than the body of an adult Canary, consequently easier to handle without fear of injury. A Canary at six or seven days old is so frail that some fanciers would almost fear to handle them to put on a closed ring. Everyone is not blessed with fine pliable fingers and a light touch, and these are certainly very necessary when handling young Canaries. Many Canary breeders, of course, are of the artisan class, where employment has a tendency to stiffen the fingers. The breeders whose hands are harsh will find themselves handicapped when they come to take the tiny body of a young Canary in their hand."

Of the putting on of the rings, Mr. Robson says: ". . . you come to the joint where the tarsus, known by most fanciers as the leg, joins with the toes. It is here the trouble comes. The ring must be small enough not to allow of its being removed once it has passed over the joint, consequently some little pressure is needed, and if not done with care crippled feet may result. . . . The joint can be moistened . . . But even with this it is not too easy. Confidence, gentleness and patience are of the utmost importance in the successful ringing of young birds with closed rings . . . Another trouble, too, is the occasional formation of those strong bony scales, commonly called shin-bones, on the front of the leg. It is not every fancier who would be able to perform the operation of cutting a ring off a bird's leg without injury to the bird. It may appear simple to some, but then many things appear simple until they come to be put in practice."

I should like to hear the experiences of others amongst your readers about these closed rings.

Old Fancier.

A CHEAPLY CONSTRUCTED FLIGHT CAGE.

By DOUGLAS E. SAYCE (Sunderland.)

This contribution is No. 1 of a practical and helpful series dealing with Bird-room Requisites and How they are Made.

WERE I a millionaire, which I am not (yet), I think I should still find pleasure in manufacturing cages and other bird-room requisites for my pets. There is always a kind of satisfaction in looking at a certain article and saying: "I made it." Moreover, if one makes one's own things, it is always possible to embody one's own little ideas in them, and in nearly all cases a few shillings can be saved by expending (pleasantly, I think) a little time in the workshop, however small and inadequate that workshop may be. So these few short articles on the making of bird-room requisities will, I trust, be of interest to fanciers who have not an overdose of this world's goods, yet who have a few tools and are fond of using them for the benefit of their pets.

Something that Will Do Young Canaries Good.

My subject is a flight cage. The breeding season is now getting into full swing, and what will do the young Canaries more good than a "turn loose" in a big cage; and what will better fit them for the approaching first moult which carries off so many young birds which are not in glowing health? In the Christmas number of CAGE BIRDS there appeared an article, by myself, on the making of breeding cages from three-ply wood, and it is with three-ply that the flight cage is made; moreover, the wood obtained is from the same source, namely, tea-chests.

The cage measures 45in. by 30in. by 15in., and although such a fine size, yet the total cost is little more than five shillings. From one tea-chest (complete with lid) it is possible to get six pieces of three-ply, 15in. square; a little bigger sometimes, it is true; but this is allowing for all the rough sides to be sawn off. The whole cage, complete with sand-drawer, will need nineteen such squares; consequently four tea-chests had better be purchased (they are but twopence each), and the few extra pieces will come in handy in case some of the other sides are somewhat damaged. In addition to this, some strips for the framework will also be required, red pine probably being as good a wood as any for the purpose. Nearly a hundred feet will be required, so that a plank 10ft. by 10in. by ⅝-in. should be ordered from the timber yard; for a mere trifle they would saw it up into strips of one inch width, and for a little more they would run it through their planing machine and save you a lot of labour afterwards.

Having now got these strips 1in. by ⅝-in. and a supply of three-ply we may proceed with the cage. But first let me point out that although it will be an inexpensive cage, it must be built with great care: no gaping joints should appear, and the workmanship throughout should be of the very best. In order to facilitate this, it is advisable to saw up the wood into correct lengths first, before the separate frameworks are made up. So proceed to cut seven lengths of 45in., eight lengths of 30in., six lengths of 15in., and eight of 15¾. If these are cut absolutely accurately it will save much annoyance when the cage is screwed together.

Start with the Back.

Perhaps it will be best to start with the back. The completed framework, with measurements, is shown in Fig. 1. (It will be seen that this framework will just accommodate six pieces of three-ply, and will then practically be a single sheet of 45in. by 15in., strong and rigid into the bargain). There will be twelve joints to make in this framework and great care should be taken to ensure that each joint is a sound one: a tenon saw and a sharp inch chisel will be all that is required. A half-inch screw put through at each joint will make all secure; but be careful to see that the corners are all perfectly square. It is a good plan to use glue as well as screws for the joints.

Having now completed the back framework, proceed to cut the six pieces of three-ply perhaps a trifle larger than 15in. square. Plane up the edges of these so that they are perfectly square, and by means of glue and half inch nails fasten them on to the framework (as shown with two pieces in Fig. 1., the shaded portion representing the three-ply). The little overlap is planed off at the end, and the edges are sandpapered. Be careful to see that each sheet exactly butts up against the next so that no open spaces are left as apartments for mites. If glue is applied to the edges it will effectually fill up any crevices, which sometimes will appear even in spite of the most careful work.

There is not much to say concerning the other frameworks after having spoken of the back, for they are made in a precisely similar way. The side frameworks are shown in Fig. 2, being 30in. by 15in. A word or two, however, had better be said concerning the top and bottom frameworks because it will be noticed that these are ⅞-in. wider than the sides; see Fig. 3. This is to allow the top and the bottom to be flush with the back and the front as well. The advantage will be found when the work is being screwed together.

To Prevent Wood-splitting, etc.

We will now suppose that all this has been done, and that the sheets of three-ply have been glued and nailed into position and the plane run round to make all smooth and flush. Some 1½in. thin screws will now be required; but before these are put in, it is advisable carefully to bore the holes and counter sink them. If this is done the wood will not split and the screw-heads will be sunk level with the surface. Don't use glue when fastening the frame together, because any time you are moving house, or you are not requiring your cage, it may then be unscrewed and packed flat, taking up much less room.

When the above work has been done, the cage will begin to look "something like," or at any rate ready for the next stage of the proceedings, which is to make of ½-in. wood a shaped top and a mainstay to carry the wires. A glance at the photograph will explain all the details of the front. Let me add a word of caution. The height of the cage is 30in., and the usual length in which bird-cage wire is sold is four feet, and if one of these is cut exactly in half it will make two lengths of two feet each. Now it would be distinctly annoying if, when we came to make the wirework, we found that each wire had to be just over two feet; it would necessitate the purchase of twice as much wire; so be careful to have the distance between the two mainstays a little under, rather than a little over, two feet. Both the stays should be screwed to the cage with round-headed screws; and then for the purpose of distempering the inside the whole wirework may easily be removed. It is not my intention, however, to explain here the making of a wire-front; this will be done in a later article. If the fancier thinks he cannot manage this he can easily get one made by one of the many advertisers in CAGE BIRDS.

Making the Sand-drawer.

As to the sand-drawer, the simplest way is to make another framework similar to that shown in Fig. 3, with three sheets of three-ply nailed on, but of such a size as to slide freely in and out. The framework will form a rail for keeping the sand or sawdust in the right place. A piece of wood, the same thickness as the stays, should be screwed to the edge of the sand-drawer, also a couple of knobs to facilitate its removal.

A good sanitary washable distemper is the best finish for the inside, of any colour to suit the taste of the fancier. My own is done out with a fairly dark blue, which looks exceedingly well. Don't enamel the inside; enamel dries with a hard gloss and in damp and foggy weather moisture will condense on this and collect in little drops, and may give poor Dickie a "cold in the nose." The outside may, of course, be enamelled. In fact, I consider two coats of paint and one of enamel is the ideal finish for the outside of any cage.

I was politely but firmly told that in order that my own cage might stand in the spot I had previously chosen for it, it must be painted white, to match the door and skirting-boards. So I obediently painted it white with the result that it is necessary to have a good wash before tending the birds, otherwise the cage becomes a chart of finger-prints and thumb-o-graphs.

With regard to perches, don't crowd the cage with them; and don't put one directly under another (for an obvious reason).

I hope that quite a number of fanciers will try their hands at making a cage like this, for although from the description the job may look a little tedious, yet the actual manufacture is not at all complicated, and once a cage like this is installed in a bird-room, it will prove a boon both to the fanciers and the little folks who "rent" the cage.

A Jackdaw that Goes to School

And Fights His Small Owner's Battles!

UPTON, near Didcot, a little Berkshire village, should become world-famed (says a writer in the "Daily Mirror") as it possesses a boy who understands Jackdaws better than any other human being. He is Joe Butler, aged twelve, and his chief friend is a two-year-old Jackdaw named "Jack." Jack is so fond of Joe that he goes to school and church with him, pecks other boys who fight him, sits by him at meals, and will never let him out of his sight. To-day I have seen evidence of this extraordinary friendship.

For a year past the bird has gone to the village school with Joe and sat by him at his desk. Miss Hayward, the schoolmistress, allows the Jackdaw to sit there, since, if she kept him out, his mournful caws as he fluttered round the school-house would disturb the children. This afternoon I went to the school with Joe. His friend flew round and round his head. One by one the children came in and took their places. Joe came in and sat with the other boys at the back of the class.

Jack Flies Into the Schoolroom.

The schoolmistress then turned to the register and read out the names of the children. There was no sign of the Jackdaw. "He is waiting until we have started school," it was whispered to me. The register finished, the children were given books and began to read. Almost immediately a black bird fluttered round the window of the school-house. It was Jack.

Then he boldly flew in at one of the windows, stood for a moment on the window ledge, and flew across the heads of the children to Joe's desk. The reading went on as though nothing had happened. Jack took up his position by the ink-well and looked attentively at his friend with his bright beady eyes. Still the reading went on. It was amazing. I watched Joe and Jack closely. Once the bird opened his mouth and Joe raised a finger. Jack was going to caw, but stopped immediately.

During the dinner-time Joe showed me how his bird friend is ready to protect him against boys who want to fight him. A mock fight was arranged, and a little fellow took off his coat and pretended to attack Joe. Jack, who was perched on one of the posts close by, uttered an angry croak and flew towards the combatants. With wings outspread, he attacked the other boy like an angry cock. And woe betide anybody who gets a peck from Jack!

How the Friendship Began.

Joe undoubtedly possesses a most remarkable sympathy with birds, and talks to Jack in peculiar bird language of his own. The Jackdaw will go to nobody but Joe. He has but to call "Jack" and immediately there is an answering caw from a tree or a house-top, and down flies the bird.

On Sunday Joe goes to church with his brothers. Jack, of course, goes with him, but it has been impressed upon this remarkable bird that church is not school, and that he must not come inside. So Jack sits outside just by the porch, where he can keep an eye on his friend, and sometimes during the service there comes an impatient caw from the vicinity of the church porch, which has a disturbing effect on at least one member of the congregation.

How Jack got to know Joe is quite a romantic story. Two years ago Jack was born in a big tree. Bert, Joe's brother was passing the tree when he saw a poor little half-fledged Jackdaw on the ground. It had fallen out of the nest, and would have starved had he not picked it up and taken it home. Joe saw it and took pity on it. As he fed it the affectionate instincts of the Jackdaw must have gone out to Joe. Thus began the remarkable friendship of Joe, and "Jack," the Jackdaw.

The Misguided Robin.

In a stock of coal at Muswell Hill a Robin has built its nest. Showing its confidence in the early settlement of the strike (says the "Evening News"), it has laid three eggs, and expects to be undisturbed until they are hatched. Evidently the birds do not read the papers. If the strike continues, the coal will be wanted, and the Robin will have a rude awakening.

Will Swallows Breed in Captivity?

We hear that an interesting experiment is being tried by Mr. W. R. Temple in his spacious aviaries at Datchet, Bucks. Mr. Temple has been successful in breeding in captivity such delicate birds as Tree-Creepers, and is fitting one of his aviaries with temporary caves especially for the accommodation of the pair of Swallows which he now has. We heartily wish Mr. Temple success in his novel undertaking.

In Spring Dress.

The common House Sparrow is rapidly acquiring his best plumage. His colours are much more brilliant and dense than in the early part of the winter. Where the sooty air of a large town has not quite obscured his markings it will be noted that his gorget is now jet black, and his back and wings are quite bright with colour and shadings. If he had a good scrub with soap and water, he would be quite a handsome fellow in spite of his somewhat clumsy appearance.

Fourteen White Swallows in One Town!

The interesting letters on white Swallows which have appeared have induced me to draw attention to some observations some time ago recorded by the Hon. Walter Rothschild, writes Mr. W. P. Pycraft, in "Country Life." Briefly, in the summer of 1891 a pair of normally-coloured Swallows in the town of Aylesbury hatched out a brood of four white birds. The following year the same pair of birds reared one white bird out of an otherwise normal brood. In 1893 they produced two white and three normal young, and in 1894 two white young and two normally-coloured birds. Another nest in the same town, during the summer of 1894, also contained two white and two normally-coloured young; and Mr. Rothschild believes that this pair were descendants of the original pair. In 1895 this second pair produced two broods. The first consisted of three white and two normal birds, the second containing but one white young, the rest of the brood being normal. Thus, in this town during four years, no fewer than fifteen white birds were produced; but it is significant to note that none of these white birds returned to the place of their birth.

CANARY QUERIES.

Answered by CLAUDE ST. JOHN.

SEED SAMPLES (Pump, Dick).—The two samples are identical in kind and quality. There is nothing whatever to choose between them.

PEST DESTRUCTION (Spring Clean).—You may see a short article on this question before long. The subject is such an old favourite that I would suggest you and others keep the article handy for future reference.

PROTUBERANCES ON BEAK (T.H.E.).—These are probably small warty growths over the nostrils. Touch them twice a week for a month with a little boracic ointment, and if not removed or improved in that time, write again, and I will advise you further.

UNMATED FEEDERS. (D.E.).—Personally I have not tried to use hens as feeders which were not mated, but it is quite possible for such hens to be so used, as you would see on referring to Mr. T. R. Iud's notes on the Lancashire in Part XI. of "Our Canaries." The most common practice is to mate the hens to be used as feeders with cocks at the same time as the better class of birds, in order to have them nesting at the same time, and thus render it more easy to exchange broods of young which are very near the same age. Please see Mr. Weston's column for reply re Mule query.

WILL THEY BREED? (A. G. B.).—If the birds have quite finished moulting, and are in good active condition, and the cock resuming song nicely, they will be quite ready to mate by the end of this month, which is quite early enough to begin. In any case, the moulting will only keep them back a little, and they should be fit to mate sometime in April.

SAMPLES OF HEMP (Constant Reader). I'm afraid your samples may have got mixed up in post. One box reached me quite empty and only a small pinch of seed in the envelope. The boxes should have been wrapped or tied separately. No. 1 box was empty, and the seed in envelope was slightly better than that in No. 2 box, though there is very little to choose. In the main, both samples are very good, but have just passed the prime, and are on the verge of deterioration.

BUYING ROLLERS (Finchella).—All the large dealers replenish their stock by buying up surplus stock from breeders. Several of the larger dealers would doubtless supply you at wholesale prices, but it would be better to buy first hand, and work up a connection with breeders to get them to supply you with their surplus birds each season. The birds in wicker cages are sometimes, not always, imported from Germany, where a number of large wholesale dealers exist. You could easily get into touch with these by looking through adverts. in German bird papers, or inserting an advert. in our columns asking for quotations for quantities. Why not try an advert. in CAGE BIRDS Continental edition. This is precisely such a medium as will suit your need.

FEEDING BREEDING CANARIES (G.F.S.).—I'm afraid you have not read "Canary Breeding for Beginners" very carefully if you found nothing on this subject. Read pages 32, 33, 49, 52 to 59, and 57 to 60, then I think you will find you have overlooked a good deal. For still greater details you might get Part V. of "Our Canaries." It is impossible to go into details in this column. Your feeding is certainly faulty, and may be the cause of your trouble. Give a staple diet of plain canary only. Every second day give a small teaspoonful of summer rape to each pair of birds. If inconvenient to give this separately, you may give instead a staple mixture of three parts canary to one part rape. In addition to this, when the birds are about nesting give a small teaspoonful of egg food sprinkled with maw and gold of pleasure every second day, and on the alternate days a similar quantity of the seed mixture advised to a querist last week. Give a spray of green food daily, but as your hens are now so much troubled with egg-binding, you must strictly avoid giving dandelion. When about laying next time, add 20 drops of gin and ten of glycerine to the water for a few days. When eggs are laid and the hens begin to sit, reduce the diet to the plain staple only. For further details consult the above-named sources. You did right to steam the egg-bound hens, but it was wrong and useless to administer castor oil. One drop on the vent might have helped, but two drops of equal parts brandy and glycerine would have done more good internally.

ARE THEY SUITABLE? (Devonian).—Very much so. The Border Fancy is really one of the most suitable breeds for the beginner to start with. They are not very costly to start with, but may be made quite as profitable as any breed almost. They are quite hardy: can be kept in a cold room; will sit and rear their young as well as any breed; are good songsters, and do not need colour feeding. In fact, colour feeding is strictly forbidden.

AGE FOR BREEDING (Miss Bunyan). As a general rule hens bred in the spring and early summer in one year may be quite safely mated at the end of March in the following year. Many hens would start breeding at six months old, but it is not always advisable to allow them to do so, especially if the birds are of a large breed such as Crests or Lancashires. Some breeders of the latter keep a portion of their yearling stock unmated the first season, which is good policy where a large stock is kept so that a few may be easily set aside. But taken all round, hens may be considered quite old enough for breeding when nine months old. The same may be applied to cocks.

BIRDS DYING (Miss D. Price).—It is quite possible the paint not being dry would account for it, but this would not cause septic fever. You have probably either imported the disease with one of the birds purchased, or have it lurking in the cage. Treat the cock as a "suspect." Cage him alone, and keep him in another room quite isolated from all your other birds for at least a month. Remove the cage and thoroughly overhaul and disinfect it as outlined in Nutshell Booklet No. 9. and reshould consult St. John's "Canary Breeding for Beginners" (7d.); House's "Canary Manual" (1/2); Battye's "Yorkshire Canaries" (1/1); House's "Norwich Canaries" (1/1); Weston's "Stock Book" (7d.); Dr. Clarke's "Septic or Bird Fever" (7d.); Dr. Creswell's "Hygiene of Bird-keeping (1/1); Norman's "Aviaries, Bird-rooms, and Cages" (2/3); Ramsden's "Colour-feeding" (3½d.); "Seeds and Foods for Cage Birds" (1/2); or the "Nutshell" booklets (2½d. each): No. 5 "The Pet Canary," No. 6 "Ailing Birds and How to Cure them," No. 9 "The Disinfection of Cages, Bird-rooms, etc.," No. 10 "The Roller," No. 23 "The Border Fancy," No. 24 "Green Canaries." paint, etc., before again bringing it into use. See that the paint is quite dry and hard before putting birds in it next time, and when bringing it into use again; keep first one or two common Canaries in it for a month, in order to test whether the infection has gone before trusting valuable birds in it. Keep cages (of all your birds), perches, seed and water vessels as scrupulously clean as possible, and see that all food and water is absolutely pure and fresh.

ROLLER DISTINCTIONS (Miss Calley).—The real difference between a Seifert Roller and a Hartz Mountain Roller is of a wholly negative description. Originally the Seifert Roller was a strain of birds bred and trained by a Herr Seifert on the Continent, but this trainer has long been gathered to his fathers, and his strain of birds lost. Nowadays the term Seifert Roller may be taken purely as a trade description of a class of song which has more variety of 'changes" in it than that of the highly-trained hollow Rollers for coutest singing, in which length and purity of deep hollow rolls is more valued than a great variety of "changes." A well-trained Hartz Mountain would have the same kind of varied song as a so-called Seifert.

SMALL CLUTCH (W. Miller).—(1) You are probably correct in thinking the hen is a young one. It is not uncommon for a very young hen to produce a small interrupted clutch for the first, especially when mated so early as you mated yours. The eggs are not necessarily unfertile, and you should allow the hen to sit her full time. (2) The bareness round base of beak of cock may possibly have occurred from being pecked out by the hen. You should, however, keep a sharp look out for the presence of red mites. If you had separated the cock from the hen as soon as she began to sit, you might have given him some treatment, but I would not advise you to attempt any now. The feathers will be recovered when the bird moults, if not before. Try and get a little crisp young lettuce or chickweed in readiness for feeding the young, if any are hatched, as I rather suspect this hen will need a little coaxing.

MAKES NOISE A T ROOST (J. Andrews).—(1) You should first of all make quite sure the bird is exposed to no cold draught or extreme variations of temperature at night, and that it is not pestered with red mites. Either of these might be at the root of the cracking noise, and if present must be removed. Give twenty drops of whisky, five each oxymel of squills and ipecacuanha wine, and two of oxymel of squills and ipecacuanha wine, and two of eucalyptus oil in the water daily for three days. Shake well together. Afterwards give four drops each of tincture of gentian, tincture of calumba, and dilute sulphuric acid every second day for a week. (2) If other things are not obtainable, cotton wool would make a tolerable nesting material, but I do not consider it very good or suitable for the purpose. The usual moss and cow-hair bags sold at a penny each are as good as anything, or cow-hair may be used alone, especially early in the season; or chaffe, either of which is very good.

UNFLIGHTED AND PINK EYE (Ignorannus).—(1) Unflighted is a term applied to yearling Canaries which are still carrying the flights (that is, the primary and secondary wing feathers), and tail which appeared with the nestling plumage. These feathers are not naturally moulted until the second moult, and in the days of K.N. feeding it was a common practice to pluck them out during the first moult, so that new ones might grow and show the effect of the colour food. This was called tailing and flighting, and a bird not so treated was termed an unflighted bird. The practice is not now necessary, and is probably very seldom resorted to, but the terms remains to indicate a bird still in its nestling flights and tail. (2) To see the pink eye, hold the bird in front of a window in a good light with your head, between bird and light and face turned from window. Let the light come over your shoulder on to the bird, and look at somewhere about an angle, but if you hold the bird in your hand and gently move it from one position to another you will soon detect the pink eye if it is there (3) See Mr. Weston's column for reply re Goldfinch next week.

SPROUTED OATS (G. Stapleton). I have no doubt sprouted oats would be an excellent food for Canaries as a change or variant, and probably of the greatest service in tiding shy feeding hens over the few days, which usually make all the difference between saving the young and losing them. Practically all kinds of sprouted seeds are relished by Canaries, as they are by other birds. Soaked and sprouted rape is also excellent, but needs care that it does not become sour.

BARE ON THROAT (F.W.).—I suspect this is chiefly, if not solely, due to friction, most likely arising from frequent visits to the water vessel, as the long continued diarrhœa will give rise to a good deal of thirst. Take notice whether any such friction occurs when the birds are drinking, especially when the water is getting rather low in the drinker, and if so, alter the perches so that friction is avoided as far as possible. Continue treating birds as advised in reply last week.

A NORWICH COCK (F.B., Hastings).—You say the bird sings now "only frequently," which I take it is meant for only occasionally. From what you say, I surmise it is in an extremely forward breeding condition, and if you do not intend mating him put him on a diet of plain canary seed for a week or fortnight, giving in addition to this staple a spray of green food daily, and just a pinch of mixed seeds twice a week. There is probably nothing else required. If you wish to breed with the bird, and have a suitable hen in equally forward condition, you may mate them at once, in which case you would, of course, not reduce the dietary of the cock as suggested above.

ABNORMAL EGG (W.H.).—The reproductive organs are evidently out of order, and the oviduct is probably in a slightly inflamed condition. It is extremely doubtful whether the hen will do anything in breeding this season. Separate her for two or three weeks. Give a staple diet of plain canary seed. Every second day give a morsel of bread and milk lightly sprinkled with soft sugar, and on the alternate days a morsel of banana, and a third of a teaspoonful of maw seed. Twice a week give a pinch of mixed seeds in addition to above, and a young leaf of dandelion or spray of watercress daily. In the drinking water give a crystal of sulphate of soda and ten drops of lemon juice every second day for a week, and afterwards six drops of tincture of gentian and three of tincture of steel every second day for a week or ten days. If she is quite active and appears anxious to mate at the end of this treatment, you may try her again.

BRITISH BIRDS, MULES, AND HYBRIDS.

Answered by G. E. WESTON.

HAS IT BEEN BRED? (D.E.). I have no knowledge of a hybrid having been produced from the cock Siskin and hen Bullfinch. I hope, however, to see one bred this coming season in someone's garden (my own for choice) or bird-room. I have no doubt that this mating will eventually be successful.

A BLACKBIRD (W. J. Gambrill).—It looks suspiciously as though your Blackie "sulks" because of the song of other birds. It is rather an odd thing for him to do, but similar cases are not unknown in other birds—Canaries, for instance. You could easily test it by keeping him alone in an indoor room for a spell. The only remedy, so far as I can see, is to keep him away from the other birds. You are certain, I take it, that nothing is ailing the bird?

ABOUT A SKYLARK (W.H.).—I think that the bird is nervous, and that it had not been long in captivity when you bought it, which would account for its shyness and refusal to sing when anyone is nigh. It will get over this in due course. Feed as advised in the "Nutshell" booklet, by all means. Personally I prefer to chop up the green food and mix it with the soft food. It can, of course, be hung inside the cage, if you prefer this way. The Lark has a "back-end" moult at about the same time as other birds (broadly, some time from the middle of July to the middle of September).

THRUSH "UNEASY" (F. Barker).—I presume you mean that the bird has become restless and is inclined to knock about at night. No doubt it has a touch of "pairing fever," due to the fine condition it is in. Reduce the richness of his food by mixing in a proportion of vegetable ingredients (finely chopped lettuce or chickweed, grated raw carrot, mashed boiled potato, for instance) and offer some ripe fruit (vide the "Nutshell" booklet). Remove the bird to a quiet, unlighted room at night, when it will not be necessary to cover over the cage. The trouble will pass off in a week or so.

LARK KEEPING, ETC. (Ambition). 1. The Larks would use the perches in the aviary sometimes. It is well to arrange a kind of small rockery here and there, in the corners or at back. Keep only one pair of each species—Shorelarks are handsome, though a wee bit expensive, and these and Skylarks ought to suit you. 2. Not if you turn in birds used to captivity. I don't recommend fresh-caught Skylarks. 3. Skylarks have bred in captivity, and there is no reason why a pair should not do so in the aviary you describe. 4. The Bullies should do no appreciable harm in the large place you describe. Put plenty of suitable weeds in (groundsel, chickweed, shepherd's purse, etc.), and sow some rape, etc., seeds. 5. They may quite likely breed.

HYBRID BREEDING MATTERS (Nature).—1. By "testing" the eggs is meant the putting of them under hen Canaries to discover whether they have been fertilised or not. After eggs have been sat upon six or seven days, if fertile, they are opaque when held up to a strong light; if you can "see through them" they are unfertile (i.e., clear). 2. Yes, quite possible. It is best, however, to provide the foster-mother (Canary) with a mate, especially if he is a good feeder. 3. Hen Greenfinches are not to be "relied" upon in a cage, but they are the most likely of all hen Britishers to bring up their own young. 4. May is the month during which most Hybrid couples get the "nesting fever." But June and July are the great months.

KEEPING A SKYLARK (G. French). The best advice I can give you is to send 2½d. to the publishers of CAGE BIRDS for a copy of the "Nutshell" booklet on the Skylark. It will give you all the details about cages, foods, feeding for song, etc.

A JACKDAW (Sister).—Table scraps of meat and vegetables, etc., are very much relished by the Jackdaw, and should be largely utilised. As a food base, use a good dog meal (such as "Melox," or Spratt's) thoroughly softened in hot water. The book you want is Part 2 of Mr. H. Norman's "British Bird Manual," published by CAGE BIRDS.

SEED MIXTURE FOR GOLDFINCH MULE (D.Ma). The following is an excellent stock mixture: Canary and teazle 3 parts each, hemp 1 part, summer rape and linseed ½ part each, by measure. Vary this by giving once or twice a week a feed of a good brand of packet Finch mixture; a little wild-seed mixture (this is also obtainable in packets now) is also extra with relish, given occasionally.

A MULING COUPLE (P.A.S.).—It is usual for there to be a little "squabbling" when muling couples are first put together, but so long as your Goldie and hen Canary do not indulge in serious fighting I do not think you will gain by separating them. Evidently the hen has not yet come into breeding condition, however, so you can part them, if you like, and return the Goldie when the hen commences to carry bits of nesting material about, and shows a desire to put it into a nest-pan. I do not put any of my own tried Goldfinches with hens until the latter are starting to build.

THREE ITEMS (E. Horne).—(1) You did quite right in giving the Epsom salts; one or two mild doses will do good. Provide also some green food (buds off fruit bushes or hawthorn hedges, groundsel, chickweed, shepherd's purse). Get a small quantity of sulphur ointment from a chemist and gently rub a little on the place once daily for a week. (2) An exhibition Greenfinch needs size almost above all things—a small bird is badly handicapped. The chest must be wide and well rounded, the neck should consult Houlton's great work, "Cage-Bird Hybrids" (7/6); Norman's "British Bird Manual" (2/3); or Part 1 "Hardbills" (1/1), Part 2 "Softbills" (1/1); "Aviaries, Bird-rooms, and Cages" (2/3); "Seeds, Foods, and Wild Plants" (1/2); "Secrets of Hybrid Breeding" (1/2); Dr. Creswell's "Hygiene of Bird-keeping" (1/1); Dr. Clarke's "Septic or Bird Fever" (7d.); "Colour-feeding" (3½d.); or the "Nutshell" booklets (2½d. each): No. 1 "Goldfinch," No. 2 "Linnet," No. 3 "Skylark," No. 4 "Song Thrush and Blackbird," No. 11 "Bullfinch," No. 13 "Chaffinch," No. 15 "Greenfinch," No. 22 "Siskin, Redpoll, and Twite," No. 25 "Small Insectivorous Birds," No. 26 "Large Insectivorous Birds," No. 6 "Ailing Birds and How to Cure Them," No. 9 "Disinfection of Cages, Birdrooms, etc.," No. 12 "How to Moult British Birds." All thoroughly practical and instructive. Prices quoted are post free from "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

thick-set, and the head broad and bold. The colour should be as rich and pure a grass-green as possible, with tinges of yellow here and there, and the bird should carry plenty of yellow in the edging of the flight and tail feathers. (3) All the "Nutshell" booklets, I think, describe exhibition specimens of the various birds they deal with. So does Mr. Norman's "British Bird Manual;" get Part I. of this work, which deals with the Hardbills.

ROOK AND CROW (J. Thornhill).—The Rook is the bird commonly seen about the countryside, and frequently (though erroneously) called "Crow." When adult it is readily distinguishable by the bare patch found at the base of the beak, giving the bird a kind of white face. The true Crows are the Carrion and the Hooded (more generally termed the Grey). The two Crows do not flock together in the well-known manner of the Rook, but are more solitary in their habits.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by WESLEY T. PAGE, F.Z.S., Etc.

BIRDS OF HAWAII (E. Todd).—Thanks for yours. We shall be pleased to hear from you at any time re birds of your locality.

WHAT BIRDS, AND FIRE FINCHES (C.L.H.).—The Fire Finches have a soft little song, but nothing of any moment. Re the Mocking Bird and the S. American Grey Bird, I will give you a detailed reply next week.

WHAT LOVEBIRDS? (H.J.E.).—Thanks for added information, which came to hand rather late, as it means a search I shall have to ask you to wait till next Friday for a reply. You appear to have got hold of some quite uncommon species.

ORANGE BISHOP (Orangeman).—(1) There is no cheap book dealing with the Bishops and Weavers; the fact is, these bird books usually result in a loss to their publisher. (2) Yes, but to my mind the fiery orange areas of their plumage would be spoiled by being, shall I say, "reddened," and the probability is that the lovely velvety blacks would lose their purity. Better leave well alone, for the fiery orange of a fully adult bird cannot be intensified. (3) Yes, in the Seedeater class it should stand a good chance if fit in every way. (4) Budgerigars incubate from 13 to 17 days. I have had young hatched in 13 days and others, which took the full 17. Weather and the steadiness of individual pairs are the main determining factors in such cases.

ROSEATE COCKATOO BITING ITS FEATHERS (J. T. Marsh).—Stop giving meat at once. Spray bird twice weekly with quassia solution; also dust under the wings, nape of neck, and lower back with Keating's Insect Powder. Give every fourth day one teaspoonful of Dinneford's Magnesia in the drinking water, and on other days half a teaspoonful of Byno-phosphates in the water. Use only a glass or crock drinker: one holding two or three tablespoonfuls will be large enough. Diet: Seed mixture, one quart each canary and white millet, one pint each oats and paddy rice, and half-a-pint each grit (not sand), monkey nuts, hemp, maize, and sunflower seeds. Well mix and keep a supply in the cage. Also supply ripe fruit, nuts, and plain biscuit. Keep a piece of clean cuttlebone in the cage, and the cage tray covered with gritty sand. Report progress a month hence.

AN AILING AMAZON (Rex).—See our reply to "J. T. Marsh," and give your bird the same seed mixture. Give boiled corn (only keeps fresh one day), ripe fruit, arrowroot biscuit, nuts (shelled walnuts are best). Give it Dinneford's Magnesia and Byno-phosphates as in reply to "J. T. Marsh." Do not give any milk sops, table scraps, or other messes. If it will not bathe, give it a spraying with a "mist" sprayer, weekly. Use tepid water containing a little quassia solution. Keep the bird warm (not in stuffy corner, though), and strictly out of draught. Treat strictly as above, and report progress a fortnight hence. Of course, if symptoms become more pronounced, write again at once with fullest details.

CARDINAL, ETC. (B.W.).—I should give the cage another wash out, with either Izal or Phenol crystals, as much as the water will absorb of either. After treatment the cage had better stand in the open, but under cover during wet weather, for a week, exposing it to as much sunshine as English weather will permit. After this it had better stand indoors for a couple of days to get quite dry before returning the birds to it. I am of opinion your Canaries are pretty safe now, but do not omit the above precaution re cage. When you get another Cardinal keep it apart from the other birds for two or three weeks, till you are quite sure it is quite healthy. It is always dangerous to introduce newly-imported birds among healthy stock without first giving them the above quarantine period. Diet: Give it a seed mixture of one quart each canary and white millet, and half-a-pint each of paddy rice, oats, hemp and sunflower seeds. Well mix and keep a supply in the cage. You must also supply liberally ripe fruit, greenfood, and some live insects—anything you can capture, such as smooth caterpillars, beetles, spiders, flies, live ants' cocoons, and when these are not obtainable fall back on mealworms, say four per bird daily. You must also supply cuttlebone, grit and fresh water for drinking and bathing.

CONSTRUCTING AN AVIARY (F. J. D.).—The arrangements shown in your sketch will answer admirably, but I should extend the open end another six feet if possible, and plant this (open) area with laurel, aucuba, choisynias, privet, hawthorn, black currant, and put a few creepers in; wild clematis, bell-vine, major nasturtiums, hops, Rambler roses, etc., and the ground under these with grass, canary, millet, and wild bird seed mixture. You will then have an interesting and attractive aviary. Have the whole roof of the open part all wire netting, ½in. mesh. You could put in 20 pairs of birds. Finches: Zebra 7/6, Green Singing 3/6, Grey Singing 3/6, Ribbon 3/6, Bib 4/6, Spice 2/6, Striated 3/6. Mannikins: Bengalese 3/6, Silverbills 3/-, Magpie 2/-, White-headed 3/-, Black-headed 2/-, and Bronze-wing 2/6. Waxbills: Red Avadavat 3/6, Green Avadavat 2/- to 7/6, Grey 2/6, Orange-cheek 2/6, Golden-breasted 3/6, and St. Helena, 3/6. Also Red-crested Cardinals, 15/-, Java Sparrows, Grey 2/6, White 8/6 to 10/-. Price per pair.

BULBUL AND PARRAKEET (F.P.).—The Gold-fronted Green Bulbul soon becomes tame and will soon learn to come on the hand. The Editor has put the tale, "The bird that reached my heart," to an article of mine on this species, the first part of which appeared in "Cage Birds" for March 16th, and you will find all about this beautiful and charming pet therein. The temperature of any living-room will suffice for this species, so long as it is not subjected to draught. There are not many of the Parrakeets that make really good talkers—an Alexandrine would be about the best. I advise a Blue-fronted Amazon, and as the temperament of Parrots is variable, I should get one finger-tame and that has commenced to talk a little. Such a bird would be sure to please, and if costing a little more, prove the cheaper in the end. It is robust and hardy, but, like all birds, must be kept out of draught.

BUDGERIGARS (H.L.K.).—(1) The cock is evidently out of condition, or you are keeping them in a warmer situation than they have been accustomed to; give 10 drops daily of byno-phosphates in the drinking water for about a month, and supply seeding (flowering) grass ad lib as soon as you can get it untainted by frost—should be obtainable now, during mild weather, and be quite safe if gathered at mid-day. Is there any red-mite on the cock? If so, see reply to R. Murray in this issue. (2) It all depends on size of cage. Lovebirds can be kept with Budgerigars, but your cage must be large to accommodate them—an ordinary "double breeder" should only contain one pair of Budgerigars.

BUDGERIGARS (R. Murray).—As a novice you had better get our Nutshell, "Budgerigars," 2½d. post free from our manager; it will tell you more on all aspects of Budgerigars than is possible in the scope of this reply. You are dieting the birds about right, but give the millet and canary seed in equal parts. Re red-mite, you must treat cage as well as birds; scald it out, paint all crevices with paraffin, let stand for half a day in open air, and well swill with cold water, and when dry it should be free from pests. As regards the birds, spray (use a "mist" sprayer) with quassia solution, and also dust either with pyrethrum powder or Keating's insect powder. They should breed, but a roomy box with wire nettiug front would be better than the "Thrush cage." Now seeding (flowering) grass will be procurable in any quantity, supply this liberally, but you must not give it while tainted by frost.

BUDGERIGARS NOT HATCHING YOUNG (W.H.A.).—You give me no particulars, so I cannot even guess why. You do not say whether you are keeping in cage or aviary, but I should say it is very probably they have not yet fully settled; they are evidently fit as the eggs were fertile. I will suggest one or two possible causes in the form of queries. If kept in cages, have these become infested with red mite or other parasites? Can mice get access to the nest husks? By gathering at mid-day seeding (flowering) grass can be obtained now free from frost; supply as much of this as they care to eat. Our Nutshell "Budgerigars," 2½d. post free, from our Manager, gives the full treatment, both for cage and aviary; you had better get this booklet.

WILL LOVEBIRDS BREED IN A CAGE? (F. K. F.).—Your birds are Madagascar (Grey-headed) Lovebirds, and the hen of this species is an all green bird. They are not free breeders in captivity, but they have bred more freely in aviaries of late years. If you can give them a cage, say, 24in. long x 18in. deep x 24in. high, and fix up a square box, hollow log or small barrel, in one of the far corners of the cage, there would be a strong probability of them breeding. They require leaves and bark for nesting material. Supply them with a live branch, poplar, beech, birch, or from any fruit tree, and they will take what they require. As soon as you notice them begin to sit, stop supplying the nesting material.

JAVA SPARROWS AND CUTTHROATS (M.U.M.).—I can only conclude that "G.J.N." reply was crowded out of last issue, and that it will duly appear this week. If you had proper nest boxes for these birds you could not see them getting at their eggs. I never interfere with the nesting arrangements of foreign species, and do not think you will help matters by removing the eggs and returning them when sitting commences. A suitable nest-box for both species is one 6 inches square at base and 7 inches high, with a hole in one side near the top for entrance, either oval or round; if oval hole, 1 by ¾ inch; if round hole, 1½ inch dia. I should advise the throwing away of present eggs. Supply a suitable nest-box and leave the nesting arrangements of both species strictly alone. Shall be pleased to hear how matters progress.

BREEDING CUTTHROATS ("Cuttie").—Yes, but a better plan is to have a couple of nests and to put in afresh after the brood has flown; under the conditions of cage life the nest box and material become infested with insect pests; burn the latter and scald or bake the former, and also see that no parasites get a hold in the cage. I am pleased to hear of your success, and hope the young will continue to do well—young which left the nest in my garden aviary on December 24th last, are still living and doing well. Advertise them at 5/- per pair.

WHICH PARROT? (Price).—Either a Grey or an Amazon Parrot would suit you. The former for preference, and I advise you to procure an established bird, though these are fairly costly, as Grey Parrots are difficult to establish owing to the condition in which they arrive in this country. I also advise you, even if you have to wait a little, to get a bird from someone near your locality, where you can see it and hear it, under its accustomed conditions, and you will then know exactly what you are getting. Get our "Nutshell," "The Grey Parrot," 2½d. post free from our manager. It will tell you how to treat it. The same conditiuns apply to an Amazon. These make interesting and amusing pets, but are more given to screaming than Greys..

BRITISH AND FOREIGN BIRDS (Plato).—All the following are permissible: Quickthorn, Holly, Privet, (golden, common and oval-leafed), Laurel, Enonymus, Box, Fir, Cupressus, Hazel, Elder and any kind of fruit trees. Creepers and climbers for standards etc.: Wild Clematis, Honeysuckle, Hops, Bellbine, Rambler Roses, Major Nasturtiums, and Everlasting Peas. Plants: Michealmas Daisies, Sunflowers, Ribbon Grass, Mignonette, Cornflower, Garden Marigolds, also Dock, Mallow, Cow Parsley and all wild grasses. The berries of all varieties of privets can be used as bird food for such species as will take them. Friar's Balsam, three drops in the ordinary drinker (not a metal one), holding about two tablespoonfuls of water, usually soon gives relief. If this fails to meet the case, then get the following:—Ipecacuanha wine, oxymel of squills, and glycerine in equal parts; half teaspoonful in two tablespoonfuls of water as the day's drinking supply.

GREY JAVA SPARROWS (G. J. N.).—The Grey Java Sparrow (wild species) is not as ready to nest in captivity as the domesticated white variety, and a fairly ready way to get good results is to pair up a white hen with a grey cock, and their progeny would be mostly pure greys, and what few pied there are are usually handsome birds. The greys should ultimately settle down and breed—give them a roomy cage, and hang up a small square box at one end, the box to be closed on all sides, with a round or oval hole for entrance on one side; screen it with a twiggy branch. Diet: Canary, white millet, oats, and paddy rice, also millet sprays, green food, grit, cuttlebone and water. If any young are hatched, supply a little soft food, though they rear very largely on seed and green food.

FOREIGN BIRD QUERISTS

should consult Page's "Foreign Birds for Beginners" (1/1½); Arthur's "Budgerigars and Cockaticls" (6d.); Arthur's "Parrots for Pleasure and Profit" (7d.); "Aviaries, Bird rooms, and Cages" (2/3); "Seeds, Foods, and Wild Plants" (1/2); Dr. Clarke's "Septic or Bird Fever" (7d.); Dr. Creswell's "Hygiene of Bird-keeping" (1/1); "Colour-feeding" (2½d.); or the "Nutshell" booklets (2½d. each): No. 6 "Ailing Birds and How to Cure them," No. 9 "The Disinfection of Cages, Bird-rooms, etc.," No. 14 "Gouldian Finches," No. 16 "Avadavats," No. 17 "The Grey Parrot," No. 18 "Budgerigars," No. 19 "The Pekin Robin," No. 20 "Waxbills." All thoroughly practical and instructive. Prices quoted are post free from "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

COWBIRDS AND BIB FINCHES (R.W.P.).—As regards the Bay-winged Cowbird, I should certainly offer white millet and a little hemp, as well as Canary seed; also green food, and supplement the mealworms by any spiders, smooth caterpillars, well-scoured gentles, beetles, wasp grubs, etc., according to season that you can capture or obtain. The song is about as you mention. Its scientific name is Maluthrus badius. Spermestes nana, the Dwarf or Bib Finch, is a native of Madagascar. I should add canary seed and green food to the diet you are giving them, also grit and cuttlebone. The sexes resemble each other, but the female is a wee bit smaller and slimmer than her mate, and her black bib also a little smaller. Any light and airy, but not draughty, position will suit both species, and they should thrive in your room. The Bib Finches are probable breeders.

BUDGERIGARS AND "FRENCH" MOULT. (Budgerigar).—If your bird has "French moult" it is no use for breeding, as its progeny would be more or less ill-feathered. If the bird is fit the tail feathers will be reproduced in due course; if there are any broken stumps in, these should be carefully removed and then they will be duly renewed; but if she remains permanently as she is, she will be of no use for breeding purposes. I cannot say how long before they start breeding when they settle down. Some pairs take longer to do this than others, but they should do so during the year. Get our "Nutshell" "Budgerigars," 2½d. post free from our Manager. You do not say what Mannikins, so how can I answer you? But with most of them the plumage of both sexes is very similar, but as a rule the hen's beak is not so arched, neither so deep at the base, as that of the male. Bengalese, Bib Finches, Bronze-wing and Magpie Mannikins, are the most probable breeders for a cage.

POST MORTEMS.

Mr. G. Yates, M.R.C.V.S., 2, College Road, Harrow, Middlesex, will examine and report upon dead cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for reply direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis, 21s. Subjects for post mortem examination must be sent packed in a box direct to Mr. Yates, with the fee, this and any accompanying letter being kept from contact with the dead bird. Send by letter-post; it is cheaper and quicker than parcel post. Any bodies sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

C. E. Whiffen.—The Rosella I found in a badly nourished condition, death having occurred from inflammation of the bowels, possibly owing to change of food, or some foreign irritant material introduced with same. There was no organic disease existing, but at the same time the tissues were wasted, and the bird did not appear to be over strong.

H. Mackay, M.D.—Existing disease, bacillary necrosis. Exciting cause of death, acute pneumonia. Portions of the lung tissue were quite altered in character and consistence, being necrotic; and the disease had evidently been in existence some time, although, as is the case with birds, symptoms are seldom manifested until far advanced.

A. W. Hardiman.—Your loses arise from septic fever in an acute form. The principal post mortem lesions are great enlargement of the spleen, and an acute inflammation of the bowels, whilst the liver remains very little altered in character. Nothing but thorough disinfection, and isolation of healthy from diseased will tend to remove the infection. Any ailing birds should be at once destroyed, and the cage disinfected. The best plan would be for you to find another room in which to place those seemingly healthy, killing off at once any showing signs of illness, removing also cage, disinfecting same, together with utensils, and placing it apart for a few weeks before re-occupation. Discard any food you have in stock, and procure an entirely fresh supply. The person attending upon the sick birds or visiting the infected room should have nothing to do with those removed to fresh quarters. Am interested in your case, and shall be pleased to send you some medicine to try as a preventive if you will forward three stamps for postage.

GENERAL.

Answered by The Editor.

Hints on Canary Keeping (J. Little).—Accept our thanks. We will certainly find space for your contribution.

Name and Address (R. B. Wright).—We have not the space available, we are afraid, to permit of this suggestion being carried out. There is the "Show Dates Fixed" column and the directory in Cage Birds Annual.

Newspaper Cuttings (A. Strachan, F. H. F., G. Mander, and others.)—We are much obliged to you for the cuttings you send.

Illustrated Ideas (T. Hannett).—Too difficult for the average fancier, we fear. (S. Geary, W. Baker.)—We have given these before.

Fumigating a Bird-room (W. Burdett).—Your card is so badly blotted as to be practically entirely undecipherable.

A Suggestion (Constant Reader, Horwich).—We will think over your suggestion, but are afraid it is somewhat outside the scope of our journal. You are not "asking too much," for we are always glad to receive suggestions, and we thank you for writing.

Sample of Food (Lover of Birds).—We shall be pleased to give you an opinion if you will send on the sample. Glad to hear you are joining the League.

From Field to Show Bench.

One of the best Lectures ever delivered.

By J. STEEL (Dalkeith).

The third instalment of a very instructive discourse upon what the writer terms "Variorus" British birds, delivered before the Edinburgh C.B.S. (with additional matter).

FOOD and water vessels should be placed inside, and for perches I prefer a small bush, with all the twigs wrapped with soft yarn. Though I have found this species less liable to foot trouble than larger species, a little care is always advisable; and if the precaution is taken to select a bush, none of the twigs of which are directly under each other, the perches will remain clean and comfortable for a long time. In the show cage this yarn may be of a fast green colour. For the cage bottom I have used peat for some time, and I find it to be quite equal to fibre as an absorbent.

A peculiarity which this species shares with various of the small warblers—Tits, Treecreepers, etc.—is the habit of retiring to the shelter of some crevice or cranny at night, instead of roosting in the manner of Finches, etc. I have often explained this to bird-keepers, who wondered why these birds always spent the night crouched up in a corner of the cage bottom. For this reason I have always advocated supplying a warmly lined cocoanut shell or similar contrivance in the stock cage or aviary.

When Shelter is Needed.

The opinion seems to obtain, that because a species of bird is resident, its power of withstanding cold is unlimited. The fact that these birds contrive to maintain a bodily heat of 106 degrees, as compared with the human normal of 98 degrees, while the temperature of the atmosphere is something under zero, is due in a great measure to the unceasing activity I have mentioned. But with night and a suspension of energy comes a need for shelter. An instance I have witnessed is worth recording. Noticing one evening that a flock of long-tailed Tits were gradually decreasing in numbers, I found they were seeking a common shelter in an ivy-clad ruin. Carefully noting the place, I returned later, and with the aid of a bicycle lamp had the satisfaction of seeing a unique spectacle, viz., a flock of these asleep, when the combined mass bore a striking resemblance to a fluffy white kitten, and the absence of any visible head was amply made up for by tails, which stood out in all directions!

On turning our Gold-crest into the stock cage, his actions for a time will be indicative of his desire to get out. If the water vessel is large, he will probably succeed in saturating himself. Now, if anything is suggestive of great misery in a condensed form it is a newly-caught Gold-crest when wet. So as a precaution, use a narrow-necked water vessel. A method I adopt with this and all newly-caught birds, is to arrange a screen to subdue the light in all parts of the cage, except that where the food and water are placed. This prevents any frantic dashing about when the bird is approached, as the bird invariably retreats to the shady part. As he gradually becomes reconciled, the screen may be dispensed with. Sometimes we find that a specimen proves quite intractable and, despite all our efforts, refuses to settle down. The experienced hand soon recognises such, and if he be worthy of inclusion in our list of friends, he liberates these irreconcilables while they still retain sufficient vitality to recuperate. No doubt, it is annoying when a specimen which has every indication in the rough of being a gem, hoists the no-surrender flag to all our overtures. But, for my own part, I find consolation in the Spanish proverb: "Better great expectations than a poor possession."

The Process of "Meating Off."

My remarks on live food cannot be condensed without a sacrifice of that lucidity essential to the novice. When I state that I have never seen a British bird which could strictly be termed an entirely granivorous species, the scope of the subject may be left to your imagination. No doubt we have some species which can tolerate a deprivation of such additions without suffering any apparent inconvenience, and the need of such is not even suspected till we are faced with the difficulty of rearing their pure or hybrid offspring. I shall deal with that later, but the primary part of my discourse may be accepted as applicable to all the smaller species.

The process of meating off is governed by three factors: Firstly, the food must be suited to the requirements of the species; secondly, the supply and variety depend on the season; and thirdly, the supply must be maintained for a period which varies according, not only to the species, but to the temperament of different individuals of a species, some being easy and others being difficult to meat off; thus of two Wagtails taken simultaneously, I have had one so amenable as to be sporting the red first-prize card at a distant show, while the other was still dependent on a lavish supply of insects to maintain vigour. And the feeding habits of a given species are not always a guide, as I have occasionally had more trouble in meating off such partly frugivorous species as Blackcap, Garden Warbler, and Redstart, than such apparently ill to-cater-for species as Night jar, Sandpiper, etc.; so that the futility of laying down any hard and fast rules as to period or quantity is apparent.

The bird itself is the barometer by which to gauge progress. The bright eye, tight plumage and vivacious disposition, are the indications of favourable progress. An absence of these denotes a retrogade action already started, and not a moment must be lost in providing the remedy—live food in variety and sufficiency.

Foremost as a live food for these small birds, I place fresh or live ants' eggs. These are procurable from advertisers, but only during summer. But as at least one of my admirers has declared a wish to gather his own, I will describe the process. The nests are found in dry situations, pine woods being a favourite site. The appearance is as if a Crow's nest had been passed through a chaff-cutter, and thrown down anyhow. I have no desire to describe the internal economy of an ant's nest. Has not Solomon said, "Go to the Ant, thou sluggard; consider his ways and be wise?" Without wishing to depreciate the wisdom ascribed to that gentleman, I would advise the experimenter to be wise, and consider his ways before "knocking up" Messrs. Ant and Co. The ant is far from being the kindliest creature I have met.

Ants' Eggs and Where to Gather Them.

I was content to adopt good advice on my second attempt, so I chose a bright sunny day, and armed myself with a spade, a tight-fitting tin box, and a large sheet of paper. Spreading the paper in the sun conveniently near the nest, with the aid of small branches I constructed a miniature shady bower at each end of the paper, and putting the spade under the nest, I quickly transferred it on to the sheet. The result was a mass of ants' eggs, rubbish, and pine needles, the two latter predominating. Now sunlight is fatal to embryo ants, and the parent insects know that; so they at once proceed to transfer the cocoons under the branches, and into the shade. Their industry is admirable, but I have a grim satisfaction in knowing that they are not more industrious, or energetic, than I was the last time I visited them. After they had carried most of the eggs away, and thus effected a separation from the rubbish, I quickly swept the lot into the box. No doubt a lot of ants were included, but I soon made matters hot for them, when they were quickly forced to vacate. If the eggs are wanted fresh, this terminates the process, but if preservation is the aim, the evaporative and life-destroying heat must be gently applied.

As these preserved ants' eggs constitute the most valuable item in all insectivorous bird-food mixtures, I will describe the difference between a good and a bad sample. This sample is almost white in colour, but in daylight a pale creamy tinge is perceptible; it smells slightly acrid, but is entirely free from mustiness. The cocoons are unbroken, and have a full or plump appearance, and there is an entire absence in the sample of sticks, pine needles or dust. When handled, a slight oiliness is also perceptible; this is a very good sample. Now for the opposite: Brown in colour, shrivelled and mummified in appearance; musty smelling; crumbly when handled, and consisting of about one-half rubbish. This is a very bad sample, and though quoted at a price 60 per cent. under the first, is actually dearer, and for feeding about as valuable as sawdust.

But I will get on with the question of meating off. Having secured our ants' eggs, I make tracks for an old and decayed tree, which has been lying for a while. Get out another box, and with the aid of a trowel or jack-knife, I prise off large flakes of the decayed bark, and find a deposit of mould and fibre, on the inner side of which I sweep sufficient to fill the box. There is here food for reflection—and for Gold-crests. A careful scrutiny reveals the presence of a horde of creepy, crawly "horrors," eggs, chrysalides, spiders, etc.

The Bird that Reached My Heart.

By WESLEY T. PAGE, F.Z.S. etc.

FOR the past two years my bird has not been left in the hearing of Parrakeets and Lovebirds, and he now but very seldom utters their raucous calls. Instead he copies very fairly the song of the Grey-necked Serin and other Finches in the aviary adjoining his enclosure. Perhaps the most perfect of his drolleries is his imitation of the plaintive call of the little Indian White-eye (Z. palpal rosa). so perfect that even now I know of it, I am often deceived and look round to see if the White-eyes have followed me into his enclosure. He still sings the Blackbird's song, and also some part of the Robin's plaintive melody.

Attractive Qualities of the Species.

But, I hear some reader exclaim, haven't you already given the attractive qualities? Granted that his powers of mimicry are a great attraction, there are many others equally charming, and so as to be as connected as possible, my "yarning" will still be of the same individual bird; and though he was charming in his winter quarters, coming to the food saucer or fingers for worms and permitting one softly to stroke his head while he rested on your hand, it was in the spring and summer, when he revelled in the outdoor flight, that his charms were the most apparent, and the joyous abandon of living most evident. The enclosure was 12ft. square by 6½ft. high, and here what a flashing gem he was, as he sported to and fro in the glorious sunshine! In the early morning when the fresh supply of ripe fruit and milk-sop was carried in, he always insisted on taking his fill from the hand before the food could be placed down for the other birds. If a stranger carried it in, it was just the same; he claimed first toll of the food. But at other times he was equally delightful.

Entrancing Little Ways!

Whenever one entered into the aviary, he came to hand, shoulder, or arm, or tucked himself snugly away in the bend of one's elbow, or hopped about one's coat, probing under the buttons for prey, as if they were the leaves of the trees of his native wilds. I often humoured him by placing a mealworm under one or two of the buttons of my aviary jacket, and Mr. Gold-front soon found them out. But he objects to being handled. He's quite a knowing "coon," and is evidently aware it is not good for him. He will perch on your hand and permit you softly to stroke head or back, and lie contentedly on his back in your palm, but attempt to close the hand, and he's off, and very wise too, for he's so softly feathered that it is very difficult to handle him without retaining some of his plumage in the hand. On more than one occasion he was brought out of the aviary unconsciously on the shoulder or head, but he always remained there, and was thus returned to the aviary.

Complete success in breeding the species in captivity has not yet been attained, one of the chief obstacles being in procuring true pairs. Nevertheless, it has nested in several aviaries, and actually hatched out three broods in the aviaries of Dr. Amsler, of Eton, last summer, though he did not rear any. I saw one of these chicks in late September when visiting Dr. Amsler's aviaries. The chick was practically fledged, and it was most disappointing to come so near to success, and yet fail. The aviculturist must, however, endure many such disappointments.

Breeding in Captivity.

It is more than probable the species will be bred this season, and I for one hope Dr. Amsler will carry off the palm. The fortunate possessor of a true pair should give them, if possible, an aviary with a shelter attached, containing one or two growing bushes, and also put nest-boxes up under the eaves of shelter, and also inside the shelter. The usual dietary with live food ad lib will suffice.

These birds are not difficult to keep fit once the prostration incidental to importation has been overcome. The menu should consist of ripe fruit, milk sop, insectile mixture (not much taken) and live insects. Whether kept in cage or aviary, providing the cage is sufficiently roomy for exercise, the Gold-front should thrive and be long-lived on the above treatment.

To go into details: Any kind of ripe fruit may be given. Banana, orange, apple, grapes and any of our English fruits it will take, as in season. Change is most beneficial. The milk sop is most beneficial, and should be sloppy. It is a revelation to see the bird dip its long prehensile tongue into the sop, and delightedly suck it up. Prepare as follows: Crumbled sponge cake, Nestle's milk, boiling water, honey, and a little liquid malt: it may sound troublesome as you read, but it is not so in practice.

As regards insects, at certain seasons the mealworm must be the mainstay, but at others earwigs, small beetles, spiders, smooth caterpillars and flies are all eagerly welcomed dainties. For the insectile mixture, any good make will suffice. Equal parts of ants' eggs, dried flies and sponge cake, made crumbly moist, will suffice. A suitable cage would be one of the semi-box type 30in. long, 15in. deep and 18in. high; a twiggy branch at each end for perches, so fixed that the bird must fly to get from one end to the other. Use china or crock food hoppers.

A Family of Beauties.

One cannot properly wind up, when describing such a species. It must of necessity be a laying down of the pen and a more or less abrupt breaking off. I would, however, like a last word about plumage, and it shall still be about the one specimen—our description is of a normal specimen. The hues of these birds evidently increase in richness with age. This specimen has passed five moults with me, and it is now much richer coloured than at first. Gold-front is intense fiery orange and extends back to centre of crown, and the green of the remainder of the crown, nape and area at back of eyes is almost obscured with bronzy-gold. The whole of the bend of the wing is rich turquoise-blue in colour, and the bastard wing is ultra-marine-blue, and the feathers in near vicinity are deep greenish-blue. These blue areas are a little larger since the last moult.

All members of the genus Chloropsis possess beauty above the average, and in my opinion the well-known Gold-front is as attractive as any. In fact, as a last word I may say that if I were reduced to being able only to keep a single bird, I feel sure my choice would fall upon the subject of this sketch—the Gold-fronted Fruitsucker.

Correspondence.

Proposed Yorkshire Canary Club for Edinburgh.

Sir,—Permit me space in Cage Birds to propose a Yorkshire Canary Club for Edinburgh and district. There are any amount of "birdie" men about here, and I am sure the club would be well supported. What clubs and societies Edinburgh has at present are mixed, catering chiefly for Crests, Norwich, Borders, and Scotch Fancies. The poor "Yorkie" is left out in the cold. I should like to see some correspondence on the subject.

Proposed Cage Bird Society for Thirsk and District.

Sir,—Kindly spare me space in your correspondence columns to announce that we propose forming a cage bird society for Thirsk and district, as a few fanciers here feel it would be beneficial to our hobby to organise, so that we can come more into touch with each other, and have a quiet chat together, etc. I should be pleased if all lovers of birds residing in the above-named district would forward their addresses to me so that I may send them a notice of the first meeting for the formation of such a club.

The Dipper's First Appearance on the Show Bench.

Sir,—Your correspondents, Messrs. Mackwell and Shirley, in last week's Cage Birds, claim to have staged several Dippers previously to the one shown at the Crystal Palace, which is quite correct. The only difference is that the one shown at the Palace has been kept in a small cage nearly eight months, and is perfectly tame. Those shown by your correspondents were wild birds which had never seen daylight in an aviary, not to mention anything in the nature of a cage, before being unpacked at the shows. They were all flying in their native haunts the previous afternoon. Mr. Mackwell says the exhibits did not attract a mention; his friend says they were always in the prize cards. All the lot did not earn as much prize-money as would pay for the entry of one. Some of them died at the shows. The one Mr. Pickles wrote about I brought back from Halifax along with my own birds; it died the next morning. One survived a short time longer. The first genuine caged Dipper was the one shown at the Crystal Palace.

The Yorkshire Union and Its Method of Balloting.

Sir,—I shall be pleased if you will allow me space to reply to Mr. Hill, also Mr. F. Hammond and Mr. Wm. Blakey. We do not charge either of them with anything they mention in respect to their honesty. We asked if all the ballot papers were delivered. We mean by this, were any of them refused delivery on account of overweight (requiring extra postage), as in some cases two were in one envelope, unfastened, with halfpenny stamp. We know late delivered or spoilt papers are no use. If the persons concerned had replied to the Press that the ballot papers received represented the returns given in the Fancy Press, that would have met the case without trying to add a tail to a Manx cat. I also said that we were dissatisfied with the ballot this year; this is easily explained, and, quoting from "Bradfordian's" letter, where he says the ballot papers are quite plain to the ordinary man, I say they are not. I have the information from one society, where a large number were present and voted on the different items. They were, I am told, unanimously for one person, and none the other. The ballot paper was marked one in favour. Now, if twenty voted, nineteen votes were lost, as the person believed he had only to put "1," like he had put a "X" on other years, when each person was supplied with a ballot paper. This has turned up since the result was published, thus proving that if a re-ballot was taken, the result would be different. With regard to our saying that we were dissatisfied with the way of the annual ballots, we simply mean this, without any person taking unto himself that we are trying to cast reflection on his or their characters, viz., that no person or persons connected with or running for any office should have anything to do with the counting of ballot papers, and that each should be published separately so that each society could have the satisfaction of seeing its own paper was properly recorded or deemed a spoilt paper. It can be looked at in this light. Do Parliamentary or municipal candidates have the right to count their own votes? No. Are they regarded as dishonest persons? No. If they were, would they be nominated to fill honourable positions? The same applies to Messrs. Hill, Hammond, and Blakey. They are held in the highest esteem by the Yorkshire Union of Cage Bird Societies, and we do not cast any reflections on their personal characters; in fact, we do not attack any one of them with such statements as published. We have not made an attack on anyone, only the Yorkshire Union; the method of ballot wants a different system to give better satisfaction all round. If we are only a small society, we should have a right to an answer, as we pay our portion to the Union, without the three individuals taking unto themselves the whole question. If these persons feel they have been hurt in any way, I beg to apologise on behalf of our society for any kind of statement they think has applied to them; but we have not attacked any single person. Also, we do not say that the returns given are not the same as the ballot papers received. We said that the returns published in the Fancy Press were not as they were voted on at the respective meetings (on the information supplied by members of different societies), and that a re-ballot would tell a different tale; not that any other person or persons would be elected, but the figures would be different. We hope another year the ballot papers will be more easily understood and put an end to it all, and that members will know exactly what they are voting for.

An Idea for a Nest Board.

Sir,—Here is a sketch of a useful nest board for an ordinary earthenware nest pan. Instead of having the whole partition sliding out, my breeding cages have the top half (a) wired, but fixed, the lower half being a sliding panel of wood (b). A shelf of wood (c) is placed halfway up the partition, at the bottom of the wired portion. This has half-inch sides and a hole (d) for the nest pan. A perch (e) is placed a short way from it, and another the other side of the partition. The advantage of this plan is that the old birds, if put in the other compartment, cannot possibly pluck the young, but are able to feed them. I hope this may be useful to other readers, as it has been to me.

Robert Symons.

A Suggested Norwich Plainhead Club for the Midlands.

Sir,—Unlike Mr. Anderton, I was very pleased to see the suggestion of a Norwich Plainhead Club for the Midlands. It has always been a source of astonishment to me why there hasn't been one started before. There are plenty of fanciers who breed Norwich in the Midlands to run a specialist club for the variety, as well as plenty of good societies who will probably be pleased to have their patronage. The majority of N.P.C. members are resident in or around Lancashire, and the majority of patronage shows are in that district, and rightly so; but one doesn't expect a Midland fancier to send his birds into Lancashire for a week-end show when he has a show on his own doorstep, as it were. Now that a club for the Midlands is suggested, perhaps the patronage of the N.P.C. will be given exclusively to shows nearer home. And why not? There are plenty of good societies in or around Lancashire worthy of the patronage, and enough Norwich breeders to still keep the old boat in deep water. Mr. Anderton seems to look on the new Club in the form of a competitor. I can remember every club being started since the Parent Club, and each has been in turn remonstrated with, but without avail. The new clubs have gone on and prospered, apparently, and still the old club hasn't suffered to any appreciable extent. So why should we cavil at the formation of another, which will make six for England alone? Perhaps gallant little Wales will want one next! Mr. Anderton says the Norwich Plainhead is still a progressive variety. Personally, I don't quite see calling the Norwich a progressive variety and then almost in the same breath putting a spoke in the wheel of progress by trying to stultify a new club at its formation.

Sir,—At a meeting held at St. John's Schools, Southall, on March 21, it was unanimously decided to form a cage bird society, to be known as the "Middlesex Ornithological Society," with membership open to the county of Middlesex. The following officers were elected:—President, Rev. F. Roberts; chairman, J. R. Higgins; assistant secretary, T. H. Fletcher; secretary and treasurer, Jeffery Jefferis; committee, Messrs. H. Burrows, R. Cambers, A. Crockett, C. Huxley, P. J. Jamison, W. H. Phipps, J. Smith, W. Taylor, and F. Wright. Rules were adopted, and rule cards will be sent out as soon as received from the printers. Meetings will be held at St. John's Schools, Southall, on the first Monday in each month, at 8 p.m., and they will be duly announced in this journal. Next meeting, Thursday, April 4. The subscription is 4d. per month, with an entrance fee of 1s. Fanciers are cordially invited to join, and any information will gladly be given by the secretary and treasurer.

The Type of Present-day Winning Norwich Plainheads.

An Explanation.

Sir,—I notice in your issue of March 23 a letter under the above heading from one who signs himself "Novice." He enclosed to you the "Eastern Evening News" of March 16, referring to the concert held by the members of the United Bird Breeding Society, and also to the few words which I said there. I wish to say there were words in the "Eastern Evening News" which I did not say; some being left out and others added, which give my remarks a different appearance. But I should not have taken any notice had it not appeared in your paper. I notice, sir, that your printers have not copied it quite correctly, viz., Norwich Plainhead classes should be Norwich Plainhead cock classes, which makes a deal of difference, as the former would include hens as well. I may say I did not attend the late Palace Show myself, but the members of the U.B.B.S. said that the hen classes were grand. Neither did I say that one of the members remarked that he would not have the "winners" in certain of the classes in his bird room; it was one bird only, the winner in a certain class. That letter "s" added to the end of the word, what a difference it makes! I think, sir, your readers will find that the following statement gives matters a different appearance also. I must say that I have judged the shows of the U.B.B.S. for many years in succession, and I told them as they had elected me again to judge their next show, and as they had several new members, I thought it only right they should know that type and quality were the first considerations with me, and that I could not do with big, coarse-feathered, "fosy" chested birds (a kind of pigmy Pouter, I term them); neither could I do with colour-fed Crested-breds, as many of them seemed nothing else. I also said that birds of excellent type and quality could always be seen at the shows of the U.B.B.S. (some perhaps a bit small), and I told them by all means to get as much size as possible, but not at the expense of type and quality. Now, sir, I am quite aware that it is the easiest thing in the world to make a mistake, but as it is through no fault of mine that these mistakes got into print, I shall be glad if you will kindly correct.

Some Truths About the Scotch Fancy Canary.

A Plea for First Prizes of 25s.

Sir,—Replying to the letters from Mr. Dunlop and "Shamrock," what I stated as to the price last year, and the beginning of this, was absolutely correct, and they were birds bred from first-class stock. I am going to watch those that were sold at four pounds a pair. When our friends come to the West of Scotland to buy they have well-filled pockets; they go to those who can command big prices, and they have the honour of leaving behind more than they expected. A man should "know his way about." I went to the leading breeder's house years ago and fixed upon a grand buff cock. I asked the price; two pounds. I took him home, and he produced winners and was the founder of a reliable strain. Five months ago I advised a breeder to try and get a bird from one of the best breeders in Scotland; he acted upon my advice, and was well suited at less than two pounds. Scotch fancies have been a drug in the market, for the open shows have brought down the prices. The fancier who pays railway charges, admission to the show, and for dinner and tea, even with a 1st, has very little profit, as winners know. In going to a bird show, put all the birds in one cage, and pay for the other cages as empties—or send on the cages the day before at empty rate, and have them in the show ready to run the birds into. We will never have right open shows until the first prize for the Scotch Fancy Canary is 25s., and do away also with paltry special prizes. Let us have silent presidents, good organisers, hard-working secretaries, and energetic committees to run the shows on sound commercial principles; they will be supported by hearty fanciers, and we will see a reaction for the better in the Fancy. I say again that the Scotch Fancy Canary is a bird of position, but, of course, it has also nerve and action. I wish the breeders in Ireland every success in 1912. They have just to get hold of winning strains, and they will cause Scotch breeders to look to their laurels. Why has the Scotch Fancy Canary been discarded in England? By all means have lectures, etc., etc., and as I have opportunity I will help. Stir up the "hang-back" fanciers and workers; we have no room for them, but they are not unknown.

Esparto Grass.

Sir,—I notice in Cage Birds a very interesting discourse by Mr. Steel, entitled "From Field to Show Bench," in which he mentions esparto grass. I used to get this from a man years ago, but am now out of touch with him, and I haven't been able to get any since. I would be very grateful to Mr. Steel or any other reader of Cage Birds if he could tell me where I could buy some.

Was it a Genuine Yellow-hammer-Canary Mule?

Sir,—When talking to a very old breeder and exhibitor the other day of the old-time shows, back in the eighties, our conversation drifted on to rare Mules and Hybrids. He said he remembered a bird exhibited at the Norwich Alliance Show as a Yellowhammer-Canary Mule. He could not give much information about it, except that it caused much talk at the time. The exhibitor stated it was bred from a Yellowhammer cock and a Norwich hen. I have several old show catalogues, and on looking them over I find this bird was shown in 1882 or 1883 (the date not being very clear on the page) by Mr. J. Drake, of Ipswich, in Class 32, "Any Variety Mule not before mentioned," where the judge gave it first. It would be very interesting if some of the old fanciers could enlighten us on this, and say if it was a genuine specimen and also if it was exhibited at any other show, as, following up the catalogues of different shows, including the Palace Shows, since 1884, I do not see any account of it being exhibited anywhere else.

A Meadow Pipit's Visit to the Photographer.

Cuckoo's Fourth Winter in Captivity.

Sir,—I thought you might like this little photograph of little "Tot," about whom I wrote to you some time back. It is taken by electric light. Most general photographers, I find, fight shy of taking birds, but the lady operator to whom I went said she would try her best. So on the next morning I popped "Tot" into a little cage and hurried off to the photographer's. The young lady closed the shop door and saw that the upstairs windows were closed. Then "Tot" and I were arranged properly; but just then the door rattled. Down went my hand as quick as lightning on "Tot," but, quicker still, away he flew. The young lady hastened to prevent the door being opened, and then we had to begin a search for "Tot." Just then she called out in an alarmed voice: "Oh, here is the dear little bird perched on the live wires" (and in a moment she had turned the electric current off); "do come quick and put him back in his cage; we shall kill him." Well, I could not reach him, but by dint of flicking him with my pocket handkerchief and shaking the wires, I dislodged him, and after a bit he came walking on to my finger. I just sat down anyhow, talking to him. Then, 'Can you keep still just five seconds? There, that will do." "Hey, presto," little "Tot" was taken nicely. When he was safely put back in his cage, the young lady, who is a great lover of birds and animals, and was brought up in the country, noticed my Cage Birds League badge, which I always wear, so I heard some charming little things about birds. I will tell you of one. It appears that a younger sister, Maggie, had a sweetheart: they went walking in the lanes together near the house, and a little bird would keep singing (so her mother said): "Maggie's got a sweetheart." From the way the young lady imitated the note, I thought it must have been a Chaffinch, for another lady I know (who also lived in the country as a girl and used often to suffer with severe headaches) no sooner used to doze off than a cheeky little Chaffinch would come into the tree just outside her open window singing at the top of his voice: "Hip, hip, hooray, J.U.L.I.A." (the initials of this lady's name). I have got a Chaffinch which I reared last spring. He is a clever bird. He incites the Greenfinches to go to the seed drawer and steal sunflower seeds; then, as soon as they have cracked it, he waylays them and takes it off them. But he doesn't talk yet! After "Tot's" photo was taken we went over to the tackle shop for some gentles for his lunch. He ate them, and was made much of. Then he got back home at last, and when released uttered his glad little cry of "Cheep, cheep." This is all he says. He is like Hans Andersen's little mermaid, and has to depend on his pretty ways, dainty walk, and fearless and loving disposition for the affection he gets. I am often asked how is your dear little bird? He goes in his cage at night (a breeding cage) and sleeps in the little nesting compartment on a little handful of hay. He is a delicate little bird. The old Cuckoo has completed his fourth winter. I lost the other one last week, when it was eighteen months old. I had no idea anything was wrong with him, but was expecting to lose one of the young ones, which had been bad for a long time. The young one that came from the Wagtail's nest is in good health, and the old one is fairly well, but seems to feel the damp, cold weather. The old one is awfully jealous of the others, and scolds if I let one of them out of the cage; he even scolded and would have fought the one I lost when I lifted him out of his cage dead. Yet he is not spiteful to the other birds, unless they steal his food. He is fond of little "Tot," and will let him eat out of his saucer and go into his cage and sit on his perch in the window beside him.

The Judging of Quality Linnet Song.

Sir,—Seeing the letter re the judging of quality song at Linnet singing contests, I venture this letter, hoping it will be some small service to our friend McAllister, for I can sympathise with the secretary who has to try to console the novice Linnet singer who rightly wants to know what his bird has done and how it has been beaten. I give two ways of judging the quality song. Firstly, there is the method for quality and style, which are left to the judge's own ideas, and this is, I think, only for expert men and expert birds; and as these are in the minority it does not secure so large an entry as the second method, viz., the counting of the quality changes, each pause, or false note to end, to count. The latter is the best way for the novice and the club. The copy of the judge's sheet which is generally used at York can be hung up at the contest for the enlightenment of the novice, who is the man to study, for what is good for the novice must be good for the expert. I think Mr. McAllister will get what he wants from this copy, and I hope to hear through your paper what he thinks about it, and I wish them and Cage Birds every success.

What Happened to Tom and Jerry.

The New "Hact" and Its Possibilities.

Sir,—Tom Plumkins met Jerry McAnthony the other evening. Says Tom: "I say, Jerry, have you heard about that new Hact that's come in opperation? It's hot stuff, as hot as pepper. The other day a cove knocks at my door, and my missis went. I was just enjoying a sausage and mashed when I heard someone talking loud. He had a lot of side on him. He said 'Is Mr. Plumkins in?' My old gal says: 'Tom's in, if that's who you mean!' He says: 'I'm an inspector of the Royal Society.' The sausage vanished, and off I goes to the door wondering who this Royal bloke could be. 'Mr. Plumkins?' I believe, he said. 'My mother allus used to call me Tom,' I answered. 'Tom Plumkins.' 'Mr. Plumkins, I am an inspector of the Royal Society for Preventing Cruelty to Horses, Dogs, Cats, Mice, Rats, Snakes, Blackbeetles, Wasps and Flies (no sticky flypapers allowed), and now we are bringing in our beautiful song birds! I see, Mr. Plumkins, you have a bird in a cage.' 'Oh,' I said, 'that's my old Linnet; he sing, well again just now. But he's not for sale.' He looked and looked, and at last he says: 'Yes, fresh caught; I can tell by his light-coloured legs! Caught about a week!' And, blow me, a summons came. I went before the 'beak,' and that fellow told him that light legs was a sure sign of a fresh-caught bird, and they knocked me down 15s. and costs! I've had that old Linnet the last seven years!" Jerry McAnthony: "Tom, that's rich; but it's not in it with the Royal bloke what come to my house. He come right in, saying he was a Hinspector and wanted to see how many birds I had and how I kept 'em. I had my old Goldfinch in a Crystal Palace aviary, I think they call 'em, a big wire cage with what they calls a 'doom' at the top. The old chap is about eight years old, as close as I can tell. I am not quite sure this is not a fresh-caught one,' that inspector says. 'But I am,' I replied: 'it's as old as my little Fan here, and she's right!' 'Oh! you people can't deceive us. We inspectors knows! We go by the colour of the legs. Birds in the open always have pale legs; it's the action of the air. You cannot deceive me, old chap. Still, there's a double here, and you'll get the benefit; but don't let me have to complain again. You might keep it in a little larger cage, too.' 'Love us all,' I says. 'Why, missus asked when I brought that cage home whether I was going to keep a flock of pigeons in it.' She said it took up as much room as a bedstead. Why, I could put you in it, and if you ain't off I shall. Strikes me, inspector, you've got a soft job with rich old dames who've got a bit more cash than sense. You know as much about a fresh-caught bird as you do about the South Pole.' By gum, Tom, if these coves can let us in for fifteen bob on the tales they tells, you are right—it's as hot as pepper!" G. An Easily-made Nest Pan.

Sent by Mr. J. Cliff, 83, Brook Street, Selby.

I send you an idea of my own for a cheap and easily made nest pan. First, I take a round tin (a Lyle's syrup tin will be found of a nice size), and slightly bend; then perforate the bottom. Mark the tin at the desired depth and cut off the upper portion. To make the rim, I take a piece of ⅜in. lead pipe and nick it through on one side, so that it will fit over tin; I bend it round and fit it on. When the outside edge is just closed in a little it will be found quite tight. This makes a good rim, and, besides being easily bent, makes the nest steadier. The wire for hanging-up purposes can then be soldered on. This makes a good, cheap nest pan, as the tin costs nothing and the cost of the lead pipe is only trifling.—J. Cliff.

A Cheap Egg Mincer.

Sent by Mr. E. Faulkner, Bull Street, Attleborough, Nuneaton.

As the breeding season is close upon us, I venture to put before my fellow-readers what I consider an excellent egg chopper, and one that can be made at a very little cost. Size, etc., are explained in sketch. The perforated zinc can be had from most ironmongers for one penny. The egg should be placed on the zinc and worked through with a table knife, which takes but a few seconds. To make, cut two pieces of wood 5in. long, 2in. wide, and two pieces 3in. long by 2in. wide; ¼in. thick is most suitable. Nail these together. Next nail the perforated zinc to box and secure with three pieces of wood ¼in. square, which prevents the egg falling off. The above may be found very useful as a sieve.—E. Faulkner.

OBITUARY.

Mr. J. HOBBS (Devonport).

It is with great regret, writes Mr. T. Pope, secretary of the Western Counties O.S., that I have to announce the death of Mr. J. Hobbs, of King Street, Devonport, who has been a member of the W.C.O.S. for several years. Mr. Hobbs was well known in the West as a very keen and successful Crest fancier, having won prizes at most of the leading shows in Devon and Cornwall. Although the deceased gentleman did not take a prominent part in the management of the W.C.O.S., he was a regular attendant at the meetings on behalf of the annual show. At the meeting of the W.C.O.S. held on March 19 a vote of condolence with the widow and family was passed, in which I am sure all fanciers will join.

I am requested, writes Mr. R. B. Wright, by the members of the Anfield, Everton, and Dis. C.B.S. to record the very great regret with which we hear that one of the best and most respected of fanciers in the North-Western District—namely, Mr. Mallinson, late secretary of the Wallasey C.B.S.—has lost, after a long illness, his dear wife, who was a real lover of birds and a kindly woman who endeared herself to all.

*She Knew Best.

At a Sunday School treat a little girl was asked by her Sunday school teacher if she would have some more cake. "Yes, please, teacher." The teacher asked her if she would have currant or seed. *An Amusing Parrot.

In visiting my auntie last week I was shown her wonderful talking Parrot—a Grey African. Immediately he saw me he sang out "Hulloa, what are you called?" I said, "Gladys, Polly." My auntie then gave me a biscuit and told me to hold it up in front of Polly and say to him, "God save the King." Polly walked to and fro on the perch and said in answer, "Hip! hip! hurrah!" I said, "What's your name?" He said: "Bobs." "Who are you?" "Lord Roberts." "Whom do you love?" "The Pope of Rome."—Sent by Gladys Drew (aged 8), 6, Wellington Street, Stoke, Devonport.

The Pat of Butter.

A gentleman had a very tame Jackdaw, when the window was pulled down to air the room Jack would hop in, on to the breakfast table, steal one pat of butter (only one), and then hop out again. In course of time Jack left, and for at least two years was seen no more. One day, when the gentleman was out for a walk, he saw a long train of Rooks and 'Daws. He wondered if Jack were with them and called his usual caw. After repeating it several times a single 'Daw darted from the flock, came straight down, and pitched on his shoulder. He stopped through the night, and next morning stole a pat of butter and flew out again. After this it was seen no more. Doubtless it was the pat of butter that induced him to stay all night.—From the "Child's Companion."—Sent by Annie Jeans (aged 13), 17, Vigo Road, Andover, Hants.

MANCHESTER AND NORTHERN COUNTIES O.S.

General meeting, held March 18th, at headquarters, Mr. Raynes presiding over a good attendance, to hear Mr. Cutmore, of Liverpool, lecture on "Cage Bird Ailments, their Causes and Remedies," with illustrations. Mr. Cutmore went thoroughly into the general ailments that cage birds are subject to, and gave us their causes and remedies, illustrating them with drawings, and with different kinds of birds that had died of different diseases, and been preserved in spirits. The drawings showed the different organs in a bird's body, and where they were placed. Mr. Cutmore told us what they were there for, what work they had to do, etc. I was too interested to take any notes, my mind being taken up with the lecture. All who missed it missed a treat. Questions were asked, which Mr. Cutmore answered to everybody's satisfaction. Next meeting April 1st, when there will be a table show of British, with five classes, Mr. N. Fairhurst, judge.—H. Boothman, Hon. Sec.

NEWCASTLE C.B.S.

Committee meeting, held Mar. 21st, Mr. W. C. Crawhall in chair. We expect to get the Cambridge Drill Hall (our old hall) for our annual show on Oct. 18th and 19th. Our nest feather show will be held on June 22nd, in Crosby's Cafe, Northumberland-street. Also decided to have separate judge for each section. Annual picnic settled for Whit Monday (May 27th); the destination will be chosen later. We are trying to arrange for the social to be held on Boxing Day; failing our getting the hall for that date, the week before was mentioned; we hope to get date fixed shortly. We have the promise of several gentlemen to give us lectures, washing exhibition, cage-shaping, etc., so we hope to have a successful year; we don't see why we should not have. Will members and fanciers please note that our next meeting will be held at 65, Grainger-st., at 7.30 p.m.; the subject, "Question Night," "Pairing, Feeding, and Rearing"—come in crowds. I shall be happy to take subscriptions. I shall be pleased to give intending members information regarding our society, especially novices. I don't think any society does more to help the novice.—J. W. Reed, Sec., 218, Ladykirk Road, Benwell.

LONDON & PROVINCIAL O.S.

The L. and P.O.S. were entertained to a very interesting and instructive lecture, entitled "Thirty Years with the Norwich Canary," by Mr. C. House, at their meeting held at "The Raglan," St. Martins-le-Grand, on March 21st. In opening, Mr. House said it was like old times being amongst the L. and P.O.S., as he was the first to give a washing exhibition to the L.O.S., the L. and P.O.S. coming practically from the old L.O.S., founded by Mr. Thomas Heath. A summary of the lecture is given on another page. The views of the lecturer on inbreeding were considerably in advance of those expressed by any of the others present at the meeting. A very lengthy discussion followed, questions being asked by Messrs. Roberts, Oldaker, Matthes, Bamber, Lathkeilf, Campbell, Hodder, Crabb, and Wones. Mr. Crabb said how interesting the lecture had been, and moved a hearty vote of thanks to Mr. House, whom he hoped we might have the pleasure of seeing again to continue the subject at some future date. Mr. House, in replying, said it would give him great pleasure to do so, if by any means he should be in London on one of our meeting nights, as he was going into the country.—C. W. Law, Hon. Sec.

ROCHDALE O.C.

The last lecture of the season was held Mar. 10. Mr. J. Naden in chair. We had a capital attendance. Mr. J. Lees (Rochdale) the well-known Norwich Plainhead breeder and exhibitor, gave us a very good lecture on the Norwich Plainhead. He had, he said, a hard task before him, seeing there were so many well-known breeders present; but he would give his practical experience of his mode of feeding and breeding Norwich Plainheads. He told us his idea of what sort of room was wanted. Questions: What importance has the sun?—Answer: He did not think very much; only it had a tendency to bring the bird on sooner, say, a fortnight earlier. He preferred double breeders with a wire slide in preference to single breeders. He used sawdust for the cage bottoms, and grit he gave in a tin hung up on the wires. He advised the novice to buy two pairs of birds as good as his pocket would allow; also to go to a reliable breeder who had done some winning. One or two pairs of good birds were far better than a lot of wastrels. Question: Would you buy a pair of stock birds or a pair of show birds?—Answer: Always buy the best you can; if a stock bird is bought, let it be the cock; and always have type and feather on the hen's side. He was sorry to say he did not find as much type at the shows as he would like. He thought that before long there would be a change. The Southern Norwich was better for type than ours. He did not believe in too much inbreeding. Cousins were near enough. At this point we had a heated discussion on inbreeding; he answered the questions very well. He also believed in double-buffing, but did not believe in double-yellowing. Capped birds were a big drawback, making the heads look narrower than they were. He passed a capped bird round for us to examine. He told us how he fed his birds in the different months; also how he colour-fed them. He gave us a recipe for making colouring cake, which he always uses with good results. Question: Do you breed in couples, or one cock with two hens?—Answer: He bred one cock with two hens; also with a year-old bird and a young one. Q.: Do you think colour is good for the bird: do you think it goes against their breeding so long?—No; I have never had bad results. I have bred with birds I have fed for seven years. Mr. Naden moved a vote of thanks to Mr. Lees, and Mr. L. Butterworth seconded. Fanciers please note this is the finish up of our winter series of lectures. I hope fanciers will keep together and bring others with them. We have a grand room and every accommodation for another 50.—C. Whitehead, Press Correspondent.

LONGTON AND DISTICT C.B.S.

Meeting held headquarters, Mar. 12, Mr. G. Perrins in chair. The inclement weather prevented a full attendance. The discussion on open show was left over till next meeting, also F.F. show, when all members are expected to attend. After business, Mr. T. Hawley gave a paper on rearing and breeding birds for the show bench. The chairman, in moving a vote of thanks to the lecturer, congratulated the society on being able to secure such practical men as Mr. Hawley, whose advice was given after a long and practical experience. Mr. J. Davies seconded the vote. One new member elected.—G. Lea, Corres. Sec.

Decided, that several of the older fanciers give an exhibition on making egg food at our next meeting, and afterwards to invite questions. A very interesting lecture by Mr. Knowles was listened to by an appreciative audience on his method of rearing young Canaries. Afterwards he was kept busy some time answering the numerous questions, which he replied to in a very able manner. A hearty vote of thanks was accorded Mr. Knowles, on the proposition of Mr. Warburton, seconded by Mr. Hardy, and supported by Mr. Weston.—G. M. Nelson, Hon. Sec.

WINDHILL, SHIPLEY O.S.

A capital lecture on breeding was given by Mr. S. Dean at the Blue Bell Hotel on March 16th, the chair being taken by Mr. R. Garnett. The lecturer told how he came to be a fancier, his first start being with a songster and two hens. He touched on the quantity to keep, which all depended on how many one was able to look after properly. Success was chiefly dependent on regular feeding. His method was one cock to one hen; and he only tried for two rounds, so that he was able to get his birds moulted as soon as possible. The cages he used were single breeders, two feet long, and 20 inches deep, as he believed in giving them plenty of room. He had had no experience of egg-binding. The best thing he had found for red mites was burnt alum mixed with the whiting. A few questions were asked and readily answered, and the meeting closed with a vote of thanks to Mr. Dean for his capital lecture.—J. A. Taylor, Sec.

CARDIFF C.B.S.

Annual general meeting, held Mar. 21st, Mr. Whetton presiding. Mr. Smith in his report re audit paid a tribute to Mr. Sampson for the excellent way he had kept the accounts; he also congratulated the members on having a balance of £5. Election of officers:—Mr. Whetton re-elected chairman; vice-Mr. F. Slocombe; treasurer, Mr E. J. Davies; secretary, Mr. E. Thomas; committee, Messrs. H. C. Smith, A. Maggs, W. Wilson, F. Howard, F. Hopson, W. Chedgey, E. T. Banks, E. Allsop, W. Merrit, W. Morgan, A. T Simon. Mr. Sampson, on handing over the books, said that through pressure of business he was forced to give up the secretaryship. He was pleased they had found a successor, and thanked the members for the assistance given him at the open show. He appealed to members to rally round Mr. Thomas and assist him all they could. Although retiring he was not leaving them, he said, in debt. Mr. F. Jones in an able speech moved a vote of thanks to Mr. Sampson which was carried unanimously. Messrs. E Adams J. H. Brown and J. Dugmore, were enrolled as members. It was with regret we heard that Mr. H Owen was retiring from the Fancy; the members hoped he would soon be able to take to his old love again. Mr. E. James (of Messrs. James and Wells) has promised to give at our next monthly meeting his method of rearing Canaries. Decided to hold our open show November 20th and 21st. We have engaged Messrs. Mundell, Vardy, and Longden, to judge. I shall be pleased to hear from any fancier desirous of joining.—E. Thomas, Sec.

YORKSHIRE C.C. OF SCOTLAND.

First meeting of this season held in Duncan's Rooms, Glasgow, on March 19th. Our new President, Mr. R. Heggie, presided over what was probably the largest attendance we have ever had, and a lot of business was smartly got through. The committee's recommendation to hold the F.F. show on the last Saturday in June was unanimously adopted, and it was left with them to arrange for a suitable hall. Classification was discussed; decided, to have six classes: Cl. yell., cl. buff, tkd. yell., tkd. buff, varieg. yell., and varieg. buff. Judge, Mr. Bowman. Entry fee, 6d. per bird. Judging to start 3 p.m. prompt; no entries to be accepted after that time. Also agreed to give a silver medal for best bird shown by a champion, and a silver medal for best bird shown by a novice. Country members who may want to send a few entries, might let me know beforehand, and I will make special arrangements for having their birds looked after. In connection with the open show season, it was decided that all clubs desiring our patronage must grant the following classification: Clear or ticked yell. cock, ditto buff, ditto yell. hen, ditto buff; varieg. cock or hen, A.V.; unflig. yell. or buff cock; ditto hen. All applicants for patronage must give date of show and name of judge, and applications must be in my hands by 20th August. No one judge will be allowed to adjudicate two patronised shows during the season. Following new members elected: Messrs. A. Dykes, A. Bergman, J. Cobb (Glasgow), W. Gunning (High Blantyre), J. Henderson (Partick), W. Taylor and W. Nisbet (Uddingston), and C. Clayton and A. Cunningham (Cowdenbeath).—R. B. Gibb, Hon. Sec., 96, Middleton-st., Ibrox, Glasgow.

SOUTH BIRMINGHAM O.S.

Meeting held March 13th, at headquarters. Chairman Willmott presided over a good muster. Following names submitted to ballot:—Messrs. Deeley, Pinnell, and Long (Mr. Long is the local hon. sec. of CAGE BIRDS LEAGUE). While the scrutineers were dealing with the ballot papers the chairman said it would interest members to know that the monies of the society had been correctly dealt with and banked at Messrs. Lloyds. He hoped to see double the amount at the end of the year. With three more new members and everyone anxious to see the society forge ahead, a bright prospect was still before us. He called upon Mr. Jones to read his cup proposition, viz., "That two cups be purchased by voluntary subscription, price not to exceed 50s each for competition at the winter shows for members only for best unflighted bird shown, not more than three nominations, etc." Seconded by Mr. Derry. The discussion was fierce and strong. Many amendments were proposed and seconded; all were defeated, as well as the original proposition, which made the chairman ask if the members knew what they did want? (Loud laughter.) Finally decided to adjourn same until April meeting; this is one of the best ideas for the interest in shows possible. Secretary said other items for discussion included young birds shows, rules and classes for same. He hoped to arrange a "spanker" programme for both Wednesday and a Saturday show as before; two judges for Wednesday, and Mr. Roe for Saturday. He had pleasure in announcing that Mr. Saggers (a leading china merchant) had presented a very handsome tea service for competition at the two shows. So things are looking brighter than ever. Mr. Greenup thought members' attention should be given to a special rule with reference to two members residing at the same address, and the birds which were shown—(loud laughter)—the chairman remarking he hoped member Greenup would make a note of that for the next meeting. The chairman handed the prize money and awards cards from last pair show. As far as he could see from reports the society still held the record for numbers put down. He appeals to all to attend April meeting, that all can have a say in the cup proposition, etc.—J. Shennard, Sec.

CROYDON AND DISTRICT F.A.

After a very successful pair and British bird show, held at St. Michael's Hall, Croydon, March 13th, Mr. John Robson, who judged, on the invitation of the hon. sec., went round the various classes and explained to members present the show points of the exhibits, many of which he said were excellent specimens. He gave valuable hints on the selection of the various exhibits for pairing. On the proposition of Mr. A. J. Kilby a hearty vote of thanks was accorded Mr. Robson. Several names were handed to the Hon. Secretary for membership. Any fancier (within a 12-mile radius of Croydon) can learn particulars on dropping a P.C. to the Hon. Sec.—F. W. Capell.

ARDWICK & MANCHESTER C.B.A.

General meeting, held March 19th, Onward Hall, Ardwick, Mr. W. Robinson presiding. Mr. A. E. Long lectured on British Birds. For his subject he took the rarer of our British birds. Everyone present was very interested; it was quite out of the ordinary run of lectures on British birds. He described the construction of the nests, the colour and marking, and numbers of eggs laid by each species, also the colour and markings of plumage. Some very useful information was gained both from the lecture and the questions asked. A vote of thanks was given the lecturer, and Mr. Long, in reply, promised to give us a lecture on the most popular of our British birds. Next meeting we are to hear Mr. T. Harrison (Altrincham); any fancier or friend will be made welcome.—J. Spencer, Hon. Sec.

SHEFFIELD C.B.S.

Meeting held March 14th, Wenworth Cafe, Pinstone Street, Mr. F. Jones (president) in chair, supported by Mr. J. Thorpe (vice-president), and the two secretaries. Secretary (Mr. A. Hobson) gave a report on our dinner. Several others spoke on same, and expressed the desire that it should become an annual event. Our auditors (Messrs. J. Thorpe and J. G. Cowley) then gave their report. We commenced the year with a deficit of £9 10s. 11d., and finished with a balance in hand of £6 5s. 0½d. They congratulated the Secretary. The recommendations of the committee re four special table shows adopted. Point specials are to be competed for at same. Messrs. J. Thorpe, P. Walsh, F. Jones, J. Woolhouse, J. G. Cowley, W. T. Furness, C. Hobson, G. Drabble, and A. Hobson promised specials. There are to be 12 classes (2 each cham. Yorks. and Nor., 2 each novice Yorks. and Nor., 2 Crests, and two Brit.); prize money, 3s., 2s., 1s.; also specials; entry fee, 4d. The table show of muling pairs proved a success. Principal winners: Messrs. L. Falding and A. Bailey. Mr. P. Walsh judged, and made a few instructive remarks on the first four pairs. Mr. Kelley also read a paper on Mule breeding, pointing out how best to breed for dark or light Mules and Hybrids, and the best system of feeding. Thanks were accorded Messrs. Walsh and Kelley. Mr. H. E. Woodham elected a new member. Next meeting, lecture on Breeding and Rearing; novices specially invited.—J. Woolhouse, Assist. Sec.

BRADFORD EAST O.S.

The winter session of meetings, shows, etc., was brought to a termination on March 19th, when upwards of 30 members partook of an excellent meat-pie supper, served in rare style by our respected president, Mr. E. Suddards. Supper was laid in the class room alongside that in which the ordinary monthly meetings are held, and after business, all present adjourned to the supper room, and did full justice to the fare provided. The idea was one suggested at the meeting previous by our President, and it turned out a most enjoyable and social evening, which will weld the members more closely together. It was decided to apply for the Y.C.C. National Green-marked Y.C.C., and the Yorkshire County B.B. and M.C. patronage to be extended to our annual open show on Nov. 16, with Mr. H. W. Battye judge, the members being desirous of making this the best show the Society has held. The voting for three delegates to represent the Society on the Council of the Yorks. Union resulted in Mr. G. R. Rushworth, Mr. J. Rhodes, and Mr. R. Wilkinson being unanimously elected. Two of these have served the Society on that body exceedingly well during the past year. Arrangements for annual Easter ramble left over to next meeting, April 2nd. Meetings will now be held monthly on the first Tuesday in each month up to October. The ramble is fixed for Grassington, the renowned beauty spot of Wharfedale, and the party will walk back to Bolton Abbey Station, via Burnsall and Barden Tower. A hearty invitation is extended to all who would like to accompany the party, and providing the coal strike does not interfere with existing arrangements, I have no doubt a good number of members along with their wives and friends will take the journey. All members are requested to note it was decided to make the four members' shows for old birds (October 5th and 29th, Nov. 26th, and Dec. 17th) all evening shows, instead of the previous arrangement to hold two of these on the Tuesday afternoon. All birds to be staged by 7.15 prompt. Tuesday shows have been made in order to avoid clashing with the Union open shows on the Saturday afternoons. Four new members were elected to membership; any others desirous of joining this go-ahead society, please attend next meeting.—H. Hill, Sec.

NOTICE! To those about to buy a Grey Parrot. There are many points to look for when making your purchase, ways of telling at a glance in what state of health the bird is. Though it is difficult to distinguish sex, there are means. The Grey Parrot is a delicate bird, and the feeding of a newly imported specimen is therefore a matter of the utmost importance. Then, the Parrot acclimatised, care with its general diet is very needful; there are many foods which it will readily eat, but which must be rigidly avoided. With due care you can make a grand talker of a "Grey," and quickly, too, if you know how. What is a common mistake which Parrot lovers make? The answer to this question, and to every other concerning the keeping of this popular bird in health and condition will be found in "Nutshell" No. 17, "The Grey Parrot," by Wesley T. Page; post free 2½d., from the Publisher, 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C.

PARROT AVIARIES, MORECAMBE

CHEAP, CHARMING FOREIGNERS.

Such, in short, are Budgerigars, which are among the most beautiful and lively of man's feathered pets. The breeding of "Budgies" is a work of patience, but, owing to the possibilities in the production of varieties, it is very profitable. Difficulties there are in the way, many and serious, but they can be overcome. Food, and the construction of cage and aviary are very important items. Full particulars as to proper feeding, caging and management in captivity, with hints on sexing, breeding, moulting and exhibiting will be found in "Nutshell" No. 18, "The Budgerigar," post free 2½, from CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C.

THE FOREIGN BIRD KEEPER NEEDS

THE MULE & HYBRID BREEDER NEEDS

CANARY BREEDERS and MULE and HYBRID BREEDERS!

ONE WAY

of gaining proficiency in anything is to keep on pegging away, meeting obstacles as they come, and getting over them as best you can. This is plucky, but if it is bird-keeping you are at, it is apt to be very tedious, not to say disappointing and expensive. The hobby of bird-keeping, if successful, is very profitable, but success is not easily got if you have no experience, and long before you have attained it your funds and patience are both likely to fail. Many of "Cage Birds" readers have aspirations to success on the show bench. They have in this announcement two ways of reaching it presented to them. Try our way. If it does not satisfy you it need cost you nothing.

YOUR AIM

of helping Canary Breeders and Mule and Hybrid Breeders to make a success of their hobby is the quickest and cheapest and best. The authors of "Our Canaries" and "Cage Bird Hybrids" are both famous in their own departments of the Fancy. They give readers the benefit of their experiences, showing how all the pitfalls are to be avoided. The outlay necessary to get these works is little compared with the pounds and time and trouble it may save you. Just glance at the contents given below. Never were these interesting subjects so thoroughly treated before. Each work has been edited by C. A. House and G. E. Weston, both leading lights in the Fancy, and, with Claude St. John, noted specialists in the various varieties of Canaries have collaborated.

BOARDS, FRONTS, CAGE SETS.

FANCIERS, BE WARNED!

Fanciers be warned in time. Do not send for ready-made cages at ridiculously low prices. Read this: "Dear Sir,—I am sending you another order for 6 double breeding cage sets, and should like them as soon as possible. The reason I want them quickly is this: I wanted 6 double breeding cages, and not being able to make them up myself at the time I had them made by a well-known advertiser. Well, I had to burn them, as they were absolutely disgraceful.—Yours truly, J. Mitchell. 4, Parry Place, Plumstead, S.E." Fanciers, my cage sets make up into first-class cages only, and are honest value. Single breeding cage sets, 18 x 17 x 10, 2/2; doubles, 36 x 17 x 10, 4/2; fittings for same, including best white earthenware nest pans, with brackets, hooks and linings, best egg drawers, latest flat-sided drinkers and wires, 3 in. seed box sets, for singles 8d., for doubles 1/4; best quality boards, 3-ply wood, etc.; stamp for list and samples: Orford, Cage Set Specialist, 105, Cromwell-rd., Patricroft, Manchester.

A WONDERFUL COLLECTION

of priceless information. Such is the matter in "Nutshells" 25 and 26, which cover the whole of the groundwork so far as softbills are concerned. There are certain materials indispensable for the proper keeping of the more delicate of the insectivorous birds. What these are, "Nutshell" No. 25 tells you, and afterwards goes very fully into a very important subject—hand-rearing. The author, H. J. Fulljames, who is no "chicken" at the keeping of British birds, then describes all the favourite varieties in a delightfully clear and helpful manner, showing which best repay the care spent upon them. It is safe to say that everything that is anything is dealt with in one or the other of the booklets, and readers will not he long in picking up the hints. Notice! The breeding of mealworms is described and instructions as to the gathering of ants' eggs given. For the most complete instruction on British softbills, and the foods and appliances needful, if they are to he kept in perfect health, get "Nutshells" 25 and 26, post free, 5d. the two, from The Publisher, 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

KEEP EYES AND EARS OPEN

so as to detect when any of your Rollers are going wrong. How can you detect anything wrong? You don't know? Well, you ought to, for your lack of knowledge will be disastrous to the singing powers of your birds. "Nutshell" No. 10 gives you this knowledge, and if you don't get it, it will be a case of "penny wise and pound foolish." Which bird promises to be good with hollow roll, bell-roll, bass-roll, and Koller? How do you cure a bird of noisiness? What are the best training methods and the best preparation for contest singing? For answers to these great questions in Roller Canarydom, and also full particulars as to correct keeping and breeding, get "Nutshell" No. 10, "The Roller Canary," 2½d. post free, from "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

THE YORKSHIRE BREEDERS

Society do not claim to have won more prizes than others, but we do claim that a large percentage of the winners for which others get the credit have been bred by us or from our strains, which have been supplied to the leading exhibitors and dealers of Bradford and district. We intend these strains, which are of 40 years standing, to be distributed worldwide, instead of allowing two or three to monopolise the winners, which are bred from them year by year. Breeders who wish to breed their own winners will be well advised to take advantage of this genuine offer, and secure some of this blood at an early date, as not being dealers our stocks are limited. Breeding sets (1 cock and 2 hens), 12/6, 15/-, 20/- up; pairs, 8/6, 10/6, 12/6 upwards; cocks from 6/-, hens from 4/-; approval, cash or deposit: Address, "Secretary," 40, Springcliffe, Manningham, Bradford, Yorkshire.

QUEEN'S PARK AND DIST. C.B.A.

Mr. J. Robson paid us a visit to give the members his promised lecture on "Breeding and Pairing." A fair muster were present, and spent one of the most pleasant and instructive evenings ever held by this society. Several questions were put and ably answered A hearty vote of thanks to the lecturer, and also to the chairman for presiding, closed the meeting.—W. J. Lethbridge, jun., Sec.

OLDHAM AND DISTRICT C.B.A.

At meeting held Mar. 26, at headquarters, it was decided that we draw up a syllabus for next winter, and have same published on the back of our new members' cards. Also moved and seconded that we include dates for F.F. and Back End shows in syllabus. Also decided, that we have a country ramble Mar. 26. (This date is probably a slip of the pen. —Ed.) Will fanciers kindly note that at our next meeting we shall be selecting date of back end show, also judge for same. There is a suggestion that show date be altered from October to November 9; so, fanciers, please turn up and record your vote; then there will be no room to grumble.—Jas. Cope, Sec.

ANNFIELD PLAIN C.B.S.

Meeting held March 30th at Mr. J. Lumley's. Mr. S. Foster in chair, when there was a good turn up of members for the meeting and table show. Mr. W. Reid was elected judge for annual show December 21st. We made four new members, and have promises of more if things were a bit more settled. The table show was a success. 21 birds being staged. Some well-known birds were amongst them. Mr. W. H. Butler judged, and his awards gave every satisfaction. Principal winners: Messrs. Peart, Bentick, Williams. We have every promise of a successful season if members will turn up to meetings the same as they have done at the two last.—R. Peart, Sec.

WOLVERHAMPTON C.B.S.

Meeting held March 21, Duke of York Hotel, when Mr. F. J. Weaver presided over a good attendance. A further discussion ensued re clashing of open show dates; after some time, we decided to stick to the date already fixed, and abide by the consequences. The members' cup, which was started last year and left to secretary to get by voluntary contributions from outsiders (into which fund he got £1 8s.) was considered. At the annual meeting in January we decided to buy out of the fund the two gold medals won by Mr. Weaver and Mr. J. Gibbons; this left a balance of 7s. Now Wolverhampton have always had a name for being wholehearted fanciers, and they upheld it on this occasion and proposed and unanimously carried that each member put 2s. 6d. each; Mr. J. A. Tonks promised to get £1 or thereabouts so as to purchase a good cup to put on the table at next meeting. Now, all those who were not present send in your half-crowns, and never mind the coal strike. After the Sec. had taken the names of all those present, we decided to appoint a sub-committee to draw up rules to govern the cup; selected: Mr. Weaver (to look after the champions interests), Mr. O. Robinson (the novices'), Mr. Rowley (the British), and J. Gibbons (the interests of the society). The meeting finished up with paying out prize money, and a hearty vote of thanks to the chairman.—J. Gibbons, hon. sec.

FALKIRK C.S.

Meeting held King's Head, March 28th, Mr. Robertson in chair. Agreed, that classes be as at last show, and that club be opened to members of other Falkirk clubs. Judges for November show, Messrs. Price (Barrhead), J. Hendry (Leith), and C. Campbell (Glasgow).—W. Niven, Sec.

HIGHGATE & HAMPSTEAD C.B.S.

Meeting held March 28th, when, in the absence of Mr. Gardner, Mr. Dann took the chair. Mr. J. Oldaker gave a very interesting lecture on Canary breeding which the members enjoyed. Several questions were asked by Messrs. Mitchell, Lock, Hyde, Johnson, Spark, Street, Cowie, Duke, and Clark, which were satisfactorily answered. Two new members were elected viz., Messrs. Wilkinson (Holloway) and Giles (Hampstead). A vote of thanks was given Mr. Oldaker.—G. T. Clark, Hon. Sec.

WOOLSTON AND DIST. F. & F.A.

First quarterly meeting held Alexandra Coffee Rooms, on March 20th, when a goodly number of members were present. It was made known by the chairman (Mr. J. Levy) that the membership would be open to the whole of the county of Hampshire, and that the Hon. Mrs. Eliot Yorke (president of the Women's Total Abstinence Union of Great Britain) had kindly consented to become patroness. Revision of rules, with additional ones made; the work of the secretary, assisted by Messrs. Hardy and Taylor were passed. A vote of thanks was accorded Lady Swaythling and Col. Sir Henry Crichton for their donations and cordial interest in the welfare of the association, whose special aim and object is the improvement of the various breeds of cage birds, etc. A most enjoyable evening was spent, and from the number of 70 members of last year it is fully expected that by the first of June the association will be 150 strong, when all fully-paid-up members will be eligible to compete for the valuable trophies to be given at the next annual show. Committee of twelve previously elected with Mr. J. Levy (chairman), Mr. H. McDermott (vice-chairman), Mr. D. Stevens (treasurer), Mr. F. G. Etheridge (secretary), Mr. G. Lock (hon. assist.-secretary).—F. G. Etheridge, Sec.

YORKSHIRE UNION ANNUAL GENERAL COUNCIL MEETING.

Mr. M. Skirrow and the Annual Ballot.

A well attended council meeting was held Mar. 30, at Market Tavern, Bradford, Mr. H. H. Towers (president) in chair. Hebden Bridge and Calder Valley reported a member for non-payment of subs.; decided, to leave case over to another meeting to obtain further information. Wibsey C.B.S. also reported two members for the same offence, and the Union secretary was instructed to write both these members and give them 14 days in which to pay their individual subs. or otherwise they will be suspended. Holmfirth C.B.S. applied for membership, which was granted. The resignations of Denholme and Thornton C.B.S., also Keighley C.B.S., were accepted with regret. Tong and Dis. notified the Council that they had decided not to hold an open show this year as previously arranged, and they were allowed to withdraw on condition that they paid their share of judge's fee. A letter from the Yorkshire C. and C.B.S. of Ireland, re subscription to the Yorks. Union, was read; after a lengthy discussion it was unanimously decided that as the Union was composed of Yorkshire societies only, they could not entertain any society to membership other than those actually in the county itself. Mr. E. Radley reported the Laisterdyke C.B.A. for not sending him his cage labels for two entries made at their last annual show, and sought to recover his entry fees for same; decided, to leave matter over until the secretary of Laisterdyke had been communicated with. Mr. C. Pickup sought help and advice from the Council in respect of two birds lost in transit to Ireland, for which he intends to claim from the railway company for full value. Mr. F. Hammond promised to obtain advice from a private source; the Council decided to leave the matter in his hands to try and obtain desired information. The balance sheet for the past year was submitted by Mr. F. Hammond (treasurer), showing a balance of £27 odd to carry forward to the Union's account; unanimously adopted. Messrs. F. Armstrong and R. Halliday (auditors) reported as to finding the Union books in perfect order, Council made a grant of £10 to the secretary for his services during the past year; Mr. Hill suitably responded. A vote of thanks to the retiring officers was enthusiastically carried, and suitably responded to on their behalf by Messrs. H. H. Towers and F. Hammond. Decided, to deal with the charges made by Mr. M. Skirrow (secretary of Bolton Woods C.B.S.), as regards the accusations made in respect to the result of the annual ballot. Secretary read correspondence between himself and Mr. Skirrow, and demanded that the Council should make a thorough investigation in order that no stigma should not rest on either the Union or its officials. The president called upon the auditors to give their report as to the scrutiny of the ballot papers, and both Mr. Armstrong and Mr. Halliday certified in a detailed report that everything was found correct except one slight mistake, which proved of no special consequence, Mr. Skirrow, who was present, was asked for an explanation, and stated that the information that he was working on was brought to him by members of his society, who were members of other two Union societies as well. The same remarks applied in the case of the ballot as returned two years ago, it being proved beyond doubt that the two ballots referred to were accurate in every detail, as published. Mr. Hammond demanded the names of the members who attended the meeting when the resolution was unanimously passed to send the correspondence to the Fancy papers, and these being forthcoming, the Council decided that another meeting be called of the old Council on April 13, and that the eight members referred to should be notified to attend. The Council were asked for their decision as to the status of a fancier who had taken a 1st prize in a class of 5 at an agricultural show, where one class was put on for Canaries, and the said fancier had never received the prize-money. The Council unanimously declared him a novice. This brought a very lengthy meeting to a close.—H. Hill, Sec.

NORTHERN SPECIALIST CLUBS' SOCIAL EVENING.

"A success, a great success," was everyone's verdict of the first united prize distribution and social held at Crosby's Cafe, Northumberland Street, Newcastle-on-Tyne, on March 27th. In previous years the valuable cups, trophies and medals have been presented at the annual meeting of each club separately. Last year the Northern Yorkshire Club presented theirs at a social held in the Roma Cafe, Grainger Street, when members and friends to the number of about 50 were present. The pleasant evening then spent made others wish for a combined effort, and it is no exaggeration to say that every one was satisfied with the first attempt. And now that it has been inaugurated, we may look forward confidently to an even larger audience than was present this year.

The entertainment was preceded by a supper at which 138 members and friends sat down. Many who were unable to be present at the supper came in afterwards, so that the audience would number from 150 to 200. The Chairman (Mr. T. Robinson, Inspector for Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, of the Northumberland and North Durham Society) at the outset stated that his attention had been drawn recently to a case of a prosecution in London of a bird dealer for cruelty. He wished to say that those were not such cases as his society undertook, and considered that the prosecution was based on ignorance. To keep birds in cages was not cruel if they were properly cared for and looked after, and he considered that birds required more care and trouble than larger animals, such as horses or cattle or sheep, if they wished to be successful with them on the show bench. He strongly advised the wives of the fanciers present to take an interest in their husband's hobby.

Miss Wade opened the musical portion of the evening with a pianoforte solo. Mr. T. Robson followed with a song. Then we had the mysteries of Li Chung Loo, the famous Chinese conjurer. Some of the audience thought they had caught him "napping," but friend Li was one too many for them. Miss Mary Chapman sang, after which the attraction of the evening was little Miss Humble, the famous clog dancer from Blaydon. And didn't the chairman envy her, and wish he could make his old legs go as fast! Mr. W. Small gave us a song, and Mrs. McKinnie recited "Caddie doon," which touched the hearts of the mothers present. She was followed by Mr. J. J. Wilson in a song. This may be Mr. Wilson's last appearance before his birdy audiences in the North, as he told me he was going to Canada very shortly. We wish him God speed, and trust that in our Colony he may find many friends to charm with his magnificent voice. We next had a delightful song by Miss H. Ferguson, after which our old friend, Mr. Walton, gave us his impressions of a country scrize in a Yorkshire village, which made our sides ache with laughter.

This concluded the first part of the programme, and the more serious work of prize distribution was begun. Mr. J. Mackenzie presented the prizes for the Northern Norwich and Cinnamon Club, and hoped that this younger club would continue to flourish; also that some would take up the Cinnamon variety, and make it popular in the district. The new cup, which was won by Mr. H. [illegible], was greatly admired. Other members having received their awards, the Chairman called upon Mr. John Moore to present the prizes of the Northern Crest Club. Mr. Moore said that he was present on behalf of Mr. John Ford Maling, who was unavoidably prevented from being present, but who was with them in spirit. Mr. Maling was an old fancier of the Crested variety, and he regretted very much he could not get there. Mr. Moore said he thought every encouragement ought to be given the novice. He remembered showing a bird, not a Canary, and winning 13 firsts with it, whilst still a novice; this made him think he was equal to any champion. How nice it would be if some of our novices could win 13 firsts instead of having to go out at their third first prize and fight their way amongst the older and more experienced hands! Mr. Moore feelingly made reference to Mr. D. Dobson, who is ill in bed. The Northern Yorkshire Canary Club's specials were presented by Mr. T. C. Crawhall, who remarked upon the wonderful success of the secretary, Mr. R. Tindale, he having won the challenge cup for best young bird bred by a member, and special for most points both at members' shows, and in open competition. The splendid tea set given for novice competition was on view, but being won by Mr. Lyall, of Whitehaven, it had to be forwarded to him, as had Mr. Stewart's second in the champion section. The Northern Lizard Club specials were presented by the Chairman. Mr. Robinson said that of all varieties, none were prettier than the Lizard, and he hoped all fanciers would help to make it more popular. Each of the trophies had been won twice in succession by the same fanciers. The specials of the Northern British Bird, Mule and Foreign Bird Club were presented by Mr. Crawhall, in the absence of the President, Mr. W. J. Taylor. Mr. Crawhall remarked upon the mule and foreign bird cups being won outright by Mr. Maddison and Mr. Mackenzie, and hoped the club would be able to replace them this next season. The Northern Border and Scotch Fancy Club's specials were presented by Mr. J. E. Atkinson, who said that although the youngest club of all, it was second as regards membership, and he hoped all would rally round Mr. Potts, the new secretary, and strive to top the list in members. After presenting the prizes to their owners, Mr. Atkinson called upon Mr. J. N. F. Scott, the late secretary, and on behalf of the members, presented him with a beautiful gold medal as a memento from his friends, and wished him every success in Canada, where he is sailing to ere this is printed. Mr. Scott suitably replied, and said he would look back with pleasure upon the year he was in office in the N.B. and N.C.C.C.

This concluded the presentation of prizes, and the rest of the programme was proceeded with. Mr. and Mrs. McKinnie were excellent in the sketch, "Women's Rights," and when Mrs. McK. soundly raked her worse half for all the mess his birds made, it quite tickled some of the lady members, but the gentlemen had their revenge when he asserted his rights, and insisted upon keeping his birds, irrespective of any mess they made. Miss Humble sang again, and Messrs. Gentlelow and Davis, Robson, and Walton contributed. Mr. Crawhall proposed in warm terms a vote of thanks to the chairman and to the audience, and hoped this would be the first of many another such a gathering. He was sure one and all had enjoyed the night, and we were very deeply indebted to the ladies and gentlemen who had come so willingly and quite voluntarily to help us [illegible] such an enjoyable evening. The Chairman replied. To Mr. Hadcliffen, who had the arranging of the social, every one must tender praise, as well as to Mr. Crawhall, who got the programme together, as everything went without a hitch.

In the Courts.

Lads Steal Grimsby Fancier's Birds.

Four lads, T. H. Stokes (16), blacksmith's apprentice, H. E. Bishop (16), labourer, H. J. Cowdery (15), painter, and E. G. Lawson (14), of no occupation, were charged at Grimsby on March 22nd with stealing five Canaries, two Goldfinches, and two Linnets, valued at £5, the property of Job Drinkell.

The prosecutor, a painter, living at Tunnard Street, stated that he had an aviary at the back of his house, in which he kept a number of birds. He locked the place up as usual on Sunday, and on Monday morning he found that the door had been forced open and the lock broken, and the birds mentioned in the charge were missing. The buff-coloured hen Canary, variegated hen Canary, yellow cock Canary and Goldfinch produced were his property, and were worth £2 10s.

Det.-Sergt. Charles Tarttelin stated that when he called upon Lawson and asked him what account he could give of the Canaries, he said he bought them for 9d. from a boy in Hildyard Street. When taken to the police station, he said: "I'll tell you now. Four of us went on Sunday night. Two of them are at the back of our house now." Cowdery was afterwards seen, and he said, "I pulled the door open and got one Goldfinch. I gave it to Bishop to mind, as I hadn't a cage." Stokes said, "Me and Ginger (meaning Lawson) got three Canaries between us. There are two, and I let the other go last night." At Stokes' house witness found the iron bar (produced), which was used to break open the door of the aviary.—In answer to Mr. H. K. Bloomer, who appeared for the defendants, the witness said the lads had respectable homes and good parents.

Stokes was bound over to come up for judgment if called upon within three months. Bishop and Lawson were discharged, and Cowdery, who had been before the County Police Court on a previous occasion for stealing pigeons, was fined 10s.

Another Hon. Sec.

I have again the pleasure of announcing an addition to our hon. sec. list, as under:—

Filey: Mr. M. Wilson, Welton House, Rutland Street.

There are still many towns and districts unrepresented by a local Hon. Sec., and I should be pleased to hear from any reader willing to accept the position of local Hon. Sec. for his town and district.

What a Prosecution Means.

I have received the following letter from Messrs. Ody and Wilmot in reference to the costs of the successful defence which they maintained against the R.S.P.C.A. in the recent prosecution of a Rotherhithe bird-dealer, Chas. Stapleton. The case was fully reported in our issue of Mar. 16th.

R.S.P.C.A. v. STAPLETON.

Sir,—The total expenses incurred by Stapleton in this matter are £13 8s. 4d. exclusive of any payments to the witnesses who attended at the court for him. After deducting the £5 5s. awarded against the society he has £8 3s. 4d. to pay for costs, and such further sum as the witness will agree to accept. It has to be borne in mind that there were three hearings of the summons, and that nearly a dozen witnesses had to be seen, and to be brought to the court.

We regard these cases as difficult to fight, inasmuch as a magistrate is not unnaturally averse from giving decisions against the society, which in other fields of action performs much useful work. It is almost invariably the case that the costs awarded are only a small proportion of the costs actually incurred, and it will generally be necessary for defendants in a humble position to obtain pecuniary help from their fellow dealers and fanciers if they are to successfully defend proceedings of the kind in question. In fact it is a regrettable incident in these prosecutions that the defendant is generally involved in expenses whether he succeeds or not. With regard to those of the witnesses in this case, who lost work by having to attend in court, we think it would be desirable to give them some small fee, otherwise in future cases witnesses may be reluctant to come forward.

Thanking you for your interest in the case.

ODY AND WILMOT.

Taking the case of Stapleton, who was able to convince the magistrate that the charges brought against him were unfounded, together with the second London prosecution by the Society under the new Act, in which the R.S.P.C.A. succeeded in getting a woman bird-dealer fined one pound and ordered to pay two guineas costs, we have an illuminating object lesson. In the first case the dealer was haled three times into the dock of a police-court on the uncorroborated evidence of three inspectors acting in concert, all of whom admitted that they made no notes at the time. These inspectors are the paid servants of a private society richly supported by voluntary offerings of private subscribers, and the defendant is a poor man who has for twenty-eight years eked out a humble existence by carrying on a trade against which there had never before been even a suspicion of complaint. A dozen witnesses attended three times in readiness to refute the unsupported evidence of the inspectors, and only three of them had been called when the magistrate stopped the case, dismissed the summons, and ordered the Society to pay five guineas towards the costs of the defence.

When the Society Loses.

Here is a shop-keeper who is able triumphantly to disprove the evidence of the prosecuting society, but the costs of doing so amount to over thirteen pounds. The Society responsible for the prosecution pays out of its well filled coffers five guineas, and the innocent victim has to find eight pounds odd! If he had not incurred these costs he would have been fined, to a certainty, and perhaps imprisoned (the liability is a fine of £25 for each bird, with or without imprisonment, perhaps with hard labour). So that he stands to lose heavily either way, even though he is entirely innocent of the charge which is brought against him!

The Injustice of it.

If a person bring a civil action against another and fail in his claim, he has to pay the costs of both sides; but if a private Society bring a criminal action against an innocent person and fail to substantiate it the prosecuting Society pay only such portion, if any, of the defendant's costs, as may be ordered by the magistrate. The defendant has to pay the balance as best he can, and his witnesses have to go unpaid.

When the Society Succeeds.

If the Society, by the aid of a veterinary surgeon, who admits that he knows little about birds, and goes on to prove it by diagnosing blood-poisoning in a bird which has been in a dirty cage for about an hour, gets a verdict against a defendant, and this is what happened in the second case referred to above, the defendant is lucky in getting off with a "mitigated penalty," amounting to three guineas, together with a homily from the magistrate, and a public warning that such mitigated penalty must not be quoted as a precedent in future cases.

Will Members Assist Mr. Stapleton.

I need scarcely say that if members of CAGE BIRDS LEAGUE care to help Mr. Stapleton, their fellow-member, in the position in which he finds himself through no fault of his own, I shall be glad to receive subscriptions, however small, and hand them over for the purpose of defraying the expenses which he has had to incur, and perhaps paying a small compensation to the witnesses who lost three afternoons' work in their attendances at the Police Court on his behalf.

"The Animal World" for the current month is silent about the two London cases, but heads a report of the Weston-super-Mare case as follows:—"We have frequently alluded to the sufferings of birds in the shops of some fanciers, and our remarks are confirmed by a case recently heard."

A Foundation of Sand.

It may be interesting to see what foundation there is for this frequent allusion "to the sufferings of birds in bird shops." In "The Animal World" there is published each month a table of convictions obtained during a previous month by the society throughout the country, these convictions being for cruelty of any kind to animals in general. For February the total convictions, according to this table, were 624, and three of these referred to birds. In January, 597 cases were recorded, and two of them were in respect of birds. We have, therefore, in two months of the present year, 1,221 cases of cruelty resulting in conviction, only five of the number being included under the heading "WILD BIRDS, Offences during close season, etc.," the "etc." of course covering the "sufferings of birds in shops." The portion of the five which represents convictions for the latter offence is the portion which these people have as their support for the perpetual scare which they keep up by means of sensational pamphlets and the like directed against a trade which has for its reason of being the supply of the means by which thousands upon thousands of intelligent working people in our country may pursue an innocent and elevating hobby.

Lest it may be thought that in quoting the above figures I have taken two exceptional months, I give some figures from the list of convictions during a whole year (1910). The total convictions that year amounted to 6,556. Of these, 68 were included as "Offences during close season (under Wild Birds' Act)," and only three of the whole 6,556 were in connection with the keeping of birds in cages, two of these being for "withholding food," and one for "keeping in small and filthy cages." On these three cases they base their description of bird-shops as being "sickening and debasing, "infernos of agony," etc., etc.

A Cheap Nesting Material.

Get some thick string, or rope; cut into small pieces and unravel, and you will find a nice warm nesting material, which I use with every success.—D. Hill (Brampton, Chesterfield).

A Pinch of Salt!

Seeing that the breeding season is upon us, perhaps a hint on egg binding will be useful—one that is easy to follow by young fanciers. Just place a pinch of common salt on the vent of the hen, and in nine cases out of ten the egg will be laid straight away. It is quite safe.—Sam Pritchards (Hednesford).

A Reliable "Foster Mother."

When (as often happens during the breeding season) hand-rearing young birds becomes necessary, one of the chief difficulties is in keeping the young warm through the night. Procure a tin flask (a cycle oil tin answers the purpose), and fill with boiling water. Cork tightly and wrap well with flannel. Enclose in a thick wooden box that will just take same, and put a nice nest on the top of the flannel. Perforate a few holes in the lid, and you have a foster-mother that can be relied on through the long night. I have hand-fed birds from two days with this arrangement.—Geo. Street (69, Park Road, Crouch End, N.).

A Remedy for Sweating Hens.

A "sweating" hen is one of the worst troubles we meet with during the breeding season. When this condition arises, the young ones are not fed, and gradually die. Removing the cock and leaving the hen to her own resources is a good remedy, and will often rouse her to do her duty; but the remedy that has been proved to be a success is to give a bath in which a little common salt is dissolved.—W. Wallis (5, Mansard Terrace, Dartmouth).

When Renovating Your Cages.

When painting or limewashing cages for the breeding season, all open joints or cracks in the woodwork should be filled with a stiff paste made by mixing common whitening with a hot glue. This paste should be pressed into the cracks while hot. It will be found to set very hard and will hold cracks together, as well as fill them.—F. Hayward (21, Marlborough Avenue, Manley Park, Manchester).

Parrots with Stomach Trouble.

Parrots are subject to inflammation. The bird is dull, does not care to move about, being drowsy, especially in the morning, and sits on the perch in a moping attitude. The ailment may be cured by giving special diet, thus:—Mix the yolk of a hard-boiled egg with well-boiled whole groats, and add milk and bread boiled. In the drinking water, rape seed which should previously have been boiled. Give Indian corn every few days. Give a little magnesia in water for one day.—L. Seng (390a, High Road, Willesden, N.W.).

Another Mite Destroyer.

A good way of ridding birds of vermin (such as red mites) is to take a piece of flannel and drop some spirits of turpentine upon it; then fold it closely round the patient, leaving only the head uncovered. Keep the flannel on for about one minute, and the mites will be found to be adhering to it. Destroy the rag and repeat the operation, if necessary.—A. A. Kirkland (Glasgow).

WEST STANLEY C.B.S.

Meeting held March 23rd, Mr. W. Butler in chair. The first of a series of lectures was given by Mr. A. Brown (Gateshead). After a brief introduction by our chairman, Mr. Brown commenced with the Norwich Plainhead. He dealt with the Norwich of twenty years ago, and with our present-day Norwich. He described what an ideal bird should be from the end of its beak to the tip of its tail. After the lecture, he answered many questions. The meeting was well patronised, both by members and friends, and amongst the visitors we saw a few well-known faces and fanciers from a distance. A very enjoyable evening was spent, and at the conclusion a most hearty vote of thanks was accorded Mr. Brown by the Chairman, seconded by Vice-chairman E. Atkinson.—W. Elliott, Sec.

These will adhere to the gum and give the whole a very natural effect.

I was agreeably surprised to see the picture of my champion Light Mule, "Prince Charlie," gracing the front page of Cage Birds last week, especially so in company with Messrs. Martin and Archer's noted clear Linnet Mule. My Mule is just under three years of age, and has forty first prizes to his credit—not a bad record, I should say. Many thanks for the honour paid to my bird.—C. Pearce (Abingdon-on-Thames).

A HOLIDAY REMINDER.

Owing to the Easter Holidays, "Cage Birds" has had to go to press one day earlier than usual this week; thus any notices, advertisements, &c., which reached us after Tuesday mid-day have had to be held over until our next number.

Bradford West C.B.A. have arranged their members' shows for the coming season as follows:—July 13 (First Feather), Oct. 16, Nov. 20, and Dec. 28. They have now three cups to compete for, one to be won outright in one year; also many prizes and money specials at all shows. We hope all shows will be record successes. We offer a hearty invitation to all late members of the Thornton and Denholme C.B.A. at our next meeting, April 13, at the Shoulder of Mutton, Girlington.—Kilburn and Western, secs.

Kindly note my change of address to 32nd Mule Corps, Sialkot, Punjab, India, writes S.-Sergt. H. Stowe. I liked the Birthday Number of Cage Birds, and the plates are fine. The one showing the Indian birds was very interesting to me. Take the Shortbilled Minivet, for instance. I saw a flock of them in Kasauli just before I left. They were grand, flying in the sun. One generally has the idea that a coloured plate is a little far-fetched, but your artist has rather underdone it than overdone it, for it seems dull compared with the actual birds.

OBITUARY.

Mr. J. G. Keulemans.

It is with very great regret that we have to notify the death of Mr. J. G. Keulemans, on March 29, at the age of sixty-nine. We shall hope to give a few particulars of the career of this very celebrated bird artist and naturalist in our next issue.

We regret to announce the sad bereavement sustained by our fellow fancier, Mr. W. Turnbull, in the death of his wife, writes Mr. J. G. Easter (Edinburgh). Mr. Turnbull is a Border Fancy breeder, and a member of the committee of the Scottish National, but will be best known from his long connection with the Selkirk Show, previous to his comparatively recent settling in Edinburgh. Mr. Turnbull is left with two young children. The deepest sympathy of fanciers is extended to him in this his hour of sorrow.

Strikes, which directly or indirectly tend to the dislocation or limitation of travelling facilities, invariably have the effect of arousing in the majority of us the desire to be independent of train and tram services. To be free from the thrall of the time-table, to be able to travel speedily and comfortably, to avoid vexatious delays and irritating loss of time, to say nothing of the saving of expense, is rendered possible by the aid of the cycle. A serviceable machine can be purchased for £3 10s. from Edward O'Brien, Ltd., of Coventry, who also offer an extensive choice of highest-grade Coventry cycles on conveniently low easy payment terms. This season's catalogues (which will be forwarded post free on request) are beautifully illustrated, and reveal the high state of perfection which the modern cycle has reached.

HOLIDAY NOTICE.

During the Easter Holidays the offices of "Cage Birds" will be closed from Friday to Monday next inclusive.

A Correction.

In my letter respecting the Middlesex O.S. in last week's issue, there is a slight mistake, viz., meetings to be held on the first Monday in each month, should be the first Thursday in each month, at 8 p.m., writes Mr. J. Jefferis (Southall).

Early Migrant Near London.

On Saturday, March 30, in the Colne Valley, near Uxbridge, I saw one solitary Sand Martin, writes Mr. Geo. Crabb. I had the bird well under observation with a field glass for some time. Mr. Howard Saunders, in his manual, says: "The Sand Martin is one of the earliest species to arrive in spring, often making its appearance during the last week in March." I also identified the Tree Creeper, Long-tailed Tit, Gold-crest, Kestrel, and a number of the more common birds; and I saw a young Thrush strong enough on the wing to fly over a fairly wide river.

Buntings and the Crane Fly.

During June, July, and August, when the perfect crane flies emerge, it is interesting to note how greedily they are pounced upon by the Yellowhammer and Corn Bunting. The Yellowhammers literally gorge on them till their little "tummies" can hold no more, and they will squat by the roadside letting the interested spectator approach quite close, only moving a little out of harm's way or to have "just one more." Of course, most insect-eating birds take their toll of the crane fly, but the "Yight's" prowess deserves all praise. Now that the nesting season is approaching, this fact ought to be a plea for the protection of their nests, which often fall a prey to the "school boy wandering through the lane."—L. C. P. Wild-Bird Life.

In the Woods in April.

Our poets have sung the praises of the month of April, and without a doubt it is one of the most beautiful of the year. A walk through copse and woodland with the bursting buds around one, the primrose and modest violet in all their beauty, and the songs of feathered creatures in the air, make one think how delightful it is to feel that dull winter is past, and we have now the best of the year before us. Everything is waking into new life, including the naturalist and bird-lover; the former will be busy among his wild flowers, butterflies and moths, and other creatures of the fields and woods, while the latter is looking forward to the coming of our summer birds, and having a good time generally hunting along hedgerows and across furze-clad commons for the artistic homes of his particular fancy. There is still a thick carpet of leaves under the beech trees, and the rustle caused by walking through them disturbs a cock Pheasant, who is particularly wary at this season.

A flock of big wood pigeons is aroused from their afternoon doze, and these whirl away in a circle, their wings making a considerable commotion. These birds are plentiful in the writer's district, and do much damage to certain crops, the extensive woods throughout the country giving them plenty of shelter and security for nesting. They do not receive quite so much attention from game watchers as the predatory kinds, and are only shot and destroyed for food purposes, and then only when occasionally met with; much shooting in the woods during the breeding season would disturb the game, which require quiet conditions during incubation as much as other birds.

Chaffinches are plentiful in the copse, and these gay birds will haunt a particular spot some weeks before commencing to build. It therefore seems as though they have in some way already decided upon the site of their future home. A peculiarly marked cock bird claimed our attention. He was a big, bold fellow with rich breast and cap, but the white shoulder patch extended almost to the nape of the neck, so that he appeared to have quite a white back. Possibly his parents had exceptionally large patches. Who can tell?

OUR HOBBY AND THE COAL STRIKE.

As mentioned in our issue of last week, until the present industrial trouble comes to an end

From all bird-keepers thrown out of employment by reason of the coal strike we will accept undisplayed advertisements of surplus stock at one-half our usual rate.

The only condition we make is that the sender of the advertisement gives the name and address of the colliery or other works at which he was employed up to the time of the strike closuring his means of livelihood. This is for our private information, as a guarantee of the bona-fides of those taking advantage of this offer.

Note.—This offer is not open to advertisers generally, but only to bird-keepers thrown out of employment by the coal strike.

THE SUCCESSFUL MANAGEMENT OF CANARIES.

By
E. C. SMITH
(Plymouth).

This thorough and instructive article was awarded first prize in section two of our recent Essay Competition.

FOR the purposes of this paper we are to assume that the would-be breeder has birds, cages and all utensils ready for the commencement of the breeding season at the end of March; the cocks singing lustily, their vents prominent; the hens tweeting and twittering when their future partners fill the air with their sweet music.

Our breeding cages have been washed, dried and enamelled, painted, distempered or whitewashed, to suit the taste of the particular fancier; the perches are in position, the sand drawer so that it will go in and out smoothly without jambing, or being put out of order by grains of sand getting thrown over the side by the birds; the hook to take the wire of nest pan is in position; cuttlefish bone is hung near a perch, and everything is ready for its future occupants.

If the single breeder is in use the hen may now be transferred to the cage and the hopper filled with canary and summer rape, in the proportion of four parts canary to one part rape seeds; give clean water in the drinkers; give her in addition, on alternate days, a half teaspoonful of a mixture made with equal parts of maw and niger, and a half part teazle seeds, and on the days when this is not given, give a little egg food or a little cracked hemp; don't overdo the latter, as we want vigorous, but not fat, hens. Give a spray of freshly gathered green food daily. Treat the cock bird similarly, except that a little more hemp may be allowed him.

When you see him "Spooning."

At the end of four or five days give the hen just a beakful of moss, and when we see her carrying this in her beak from perch to perch and looking for some place in which to deposit it, we must pop the cock bird in a nursery cage and hang him on the front of the breeder. Shortly, when he calls, we shall see the hen pop down. When you see him feeding her and then sitting at the wires "spooning," hang up the nest pan and nest bag and let the cock run in with her. Don't be alarmed if a terrible battle soon appears to be proceeding; this is usually the case, though not always. The following day one will find the pair have started building a nest in good earnest, although sometimes the cock's share is pulling out a lot of what the hen puts in; but this will not matter if your nest-pan lining is secure.

In about five or seven days one may expect the first egg. Now is the time to commence to reduce the extras. Cut down the egg-food and leave out the hemp altogether, and give the seed-mixture in much less quantity, so that by the time the 4th egg is laid it may be left out, too. Keep up the green-food, but reduce the quantity to a small spray twice daily. One reason for this is that a hen may not be tempted to leave the nest too often.

We will now return to the eggs. Remove the first, and give in its place a dummy egg, putting the good egg carefully away in a box filled with bran. Remove the second egg and place with No. 1. On the third day you will find egg No. 3; remove this also. If the hen has built even a passable nest leave well alone, and on the evening of the day when the third egg is laid, remove the dummy and give her back her three eggs. The following morning most likely the clutch will be completed, and if the eggs are fertile all will hatch out on the 14th day, counting from and inclusive of the day following that on which the eggs were returned.

The bath should be given practically every day from the time the hen is put into the breeder until the eggs are due to hatch, but it should not be given for the first four or five days after hatching has taken place, after which it may again be given and will prove beneficial both to old and young.

Egg-food must be given.

The old birds will have been kept during sitting to a plain diet of canary and rape seeds, with green food, but when the eggs are due to hatch, or, more correctly, the evening previous, the green food must be left out and kept out till about the fourth day, and egg food given in lieu of it. Some breeders give the yolk of egg only, chopped very fine; some mix bread or biscuit with the eggs; while others, again, use substitutes for egg food, such as Spratt's, Hyde's, Rudd's, Capern's, Spiller's, and other makes on the market. This matter we must leave to the individual, but egg food in some form or other must be given if we are to rear a good percentage of the birds hatched. Whatever form one may choose, a little (not more than a teaspoonful) should be given on the evening before the young are due to hatch. This is given to "buck up" the pair, so that they will commence their duty to the young in a proper manner.

On the following morning, if one listens near the cage one will hear a faint "cheep, cheep," from the nest. Be satisfied, and don't worry the hen from the nest. When she leaves the nest to feed one may be excused taking one peep, but it must be done quickly and quietly.

A supply of egg-food must now be given and continued three times daily—early morning, noon, and evening; or if the bird "pulls" in the morning a supply may be given the last thing at night, so that the birds may have it to feed with at daylight. At first the quantity needs to be very small—half a teaspoonful for each meal will be ample for the first two days; after which the quantity must be very gradually increased as the needs of the brood grow apace. On the fourth day a little green food may be given; let it be very young and tender, fresh gathered, and the quantity small; gradually increase it in quantity day by day until a fair portion is given. Some fanciers prefer one kind; some another. I believe in chickweed and shepherd's purse, but other kinds (as enumerated later) are also undoubtedly good.

How to prepare Soaked Seed.

Soaked seeds can now be given in a separate pan. Do not on any account mix them with the egg-food. The way to prepare them is to take separate jars or basins and put in each a supply (sufficient to last several days) of hemp, rape, and canary seeds; fill up the jars with warm water—not hot, merely comfortably warm, as this swells the seeds quicker than cold. Let them soak over night, and next morning pour into a sieve or very fine gravy strainer. Let the tap run through it and return seed to jar, filling now with clean cold water. At the end of 24 hours the seed is ready for use. When required pour into the sieve, wash with cold water, take the quantity required and spread on to a cloth to take off the superfluous water. Return the remainder to jar and fill up with clean cold water. Seed treated thus will keep sweet for a week in the hottest weather. Give this to your birds from the 5th day onward in the following order: Morning, hemp; noon, rape, evening, canary; all the while keeping the hopper filled with canary and rape as before-mentioned.

The water is also an important point. The drinker must be filled with fresh, clean water at least twice a day, after first being well rinsed out. With a pair of good feeding birds the young will be out of the nest at 18 days old if the procedure I have recommended is faithfully carried out.

A FLASHLIGHT VIEW OF THE GATHERING AT THE COMBINED NORTHERN SPECIALIST CLUBS' RECENT SOCIAL EVENING.

FROM FIELD TO SHOW BENCH.

I NOW proceed to a damp situation overrun with weeds. Turning them gently with a stick, I soon locate those which have been attacked by green fly, the under part of the leaves and stems being actually smothered with aphides. I soon make up a lively bouquet, consisting of sow thistle, nettles, shepherd's purse, etc. Had I failed in locating these I should have made an attack on certain trees and bushes, the partly devoured state of the leaves of which indicates the presence of another pest. Spreading the sheet of paper under a branch, I would by dint of striking the branch with a stick have dislodged a host of these small caterpillars, and then transferred them into the box. I have no need to pay a visit to my neighbour's infested currant bushes; they will come in useful later, also the roses. Hullo!—a wasp. I watch him. Is he rising or falling in his flight; is he laden with some helpless fly; are there any more going in that direction? I follow the direction he takes, and the scent gets warm. Soon I am busy studying from the manner I have indicated whether that host is going to or returning from the nest. Ah, I have you! I mark the place with a piece of paper, and am confident of a supply of nice fresh grubs for my larger softbills to-morrow. But I will be getting home now, to give the Gold-crest his first feed, and as he has not had anything for the four hours which he has had of "durance vile," I think he won't refuse these offerings. I have plenty of mealworms and gentles, but I scorn the use of the former in summer for these species, and I only use the latter when a sufficiency of the present stock is unobtainable. I will explain how I tempt him to partake of these before I turn to meating off in winter.

Keeping "Crawly" Things Within Bounds.

I will make no attempt, for at the very least two days, to induce my capture to partake of any form of preserved food; for this period I supply a sufficiency and variety of live insects.

Now a difficulty presents itself here, as womankind has an inherited abhorrence of anything which crawls; why, I know not, as mother Eve certainly had no such qualms; but possibly the dire results which followed can only be thus atoned for. So, like the old gentleman who on the fiftieth anniversary of his wedding, pledged the shares of his joys, in a hope for their better acquaintance, I bow to the inevitable, and I take measures to prevent the reptiles straying about "promiscusly," as Mrs. Harris has it.

This I manage to check by taking two feeders, one of which is about a half-inch larger in diameter than the other. Placing the insects in the smaller vessel, I put same inside the larger, and fill the space between with water. My "better half" suggested the substitution of golden syrup, but I find that water is an effectual deterrent of insect peregrinations, and constitutes a supply for the bird also.

This done, I murmur a quotation from a local monument (to a scold)—"Peace, perfect peace," and retire to a position, where "seeing all, by all unseen," I watch awhile, and am rewarded by seeing my Gold-crest pause in his acrobatics, to make a dive at the dish; further proceedings may then be described as gratifying to him and me and disastrous for the insects. I notice that the water department is also patronised, and (good sign) he begins to preen himself.

The Secret of Steadying Softbills.

Now I find that the aphides are the most appreciated item in the entire menu, with live house flies, a good second; so I use these as my steadying agent, i.e., he shall eat these in my presence or not at all, and I shall not omit a small supply every time I visit him; my presence, meaning something nice to eat, instead of occasioning terror, becomes then a welcome event. This is the secret of steadying Softbills, and if I would add anything it would be, have patience, and avoid any bustle or fuss.

The second day's procedure is a repetition of the first day's, but on the third day I limit the supply of live food, and make up the deficiency in quantity with a first-class brand of a preserved form. This I prepare by subjecting it to the steam from a boiling kettle till the various ingredients of its composition (viz., dried flies, ants' eggs, silk-worm pupæ, crissel, etc.) are rendered soft, but not sloppy. One item I add to this, viz., one part grated cream cheese. This, I find, is greatly appreciated, and must of course be highly sustaining. Never allow the prepared food to become stale; little and often is a good motto, as the difficulty of inducing these delicate species to partake of a sufficiency even when fresh, is sufficient, and to starve him into partaking of stale food is both cruel and inevitably fatal. Those who have not the time or inclination to give the bird proper attention in this respect, have no right to deprive such species of the liberty of providing for themselves.

A Few Gentles Are Very Useful.

Now a few gentles are very useful in this meating-off process, and in response to a request I shall devote a few minutes to these, as I find many are prejudiced against their use. The gentle is the larvæ or maggot of the blue-bottle fly, and his introduction to the house in that stage which the French describe au naturel is a signal for the Recording Angel to grab his pen, and (my wife declares) his nose, for verily he smells to heaven, offensive. This effluvia, as you are probably aware, has been causing quite a flutter in medical circles lately, it being said to be fatal to the bacilli of consumption; I cannot say whether this is because of the bacilli being unable to stand the strain, or because the smell arises from some antagonistic bacilli when the law of survival of the fittest would come in; perhaps big Bacs have little Bacs upon their backs to bite 'em, and little Bacs have lesser Bacs, and so Ad infinitum. However, I want gentles, and I want them minus smell, and in a state which permits of their being admitted to the house, without giving rise to a breeze, domestic or otherwise. How I succeed in this object will be better understood by a description of my method of propagating the maggots.

CANARY QUERIES.

Answered by CLAUDE ST. JOHN.

TO CURE ROLLER CHOPPING (A.V.C.).—Am sorry I do not know of anything that will cure a Roller of the vice of "chopping." Once this fault becomes established in an adult bird, its cure is quite hopeless, and it should at once be isolated from the hearing of faultless singers. Unfortunately moral persuasion is not practicable.

SORE FEET, ETC. (J. E. Wood).—(1) It is quite the usual thing for a hen to scratch and shuffle about in the nest-pan or box very energetically when she is about building her nest. The same shuffling motions are employed to shape and mould the nesting material. But it is quite unusual for the feet to be damaged so badly in the process. Examine the lining of nest-pan carefully to see if it contains anything that could injure by pricking or scratching the feet. Also see that the hen's claws are not inordinately long from over growth, nor extremely fine and sharp. If the former, clip them back to a proper length, and in the latter case slightly blunt the points by carefully wiping a bit of very fine sandpaper over them. Paint the feet daily for a few days with extract of wych hazel, and when she next attempts to nest give only clean cow-hair for nesting material. (2) The young birds of both sexes may, if necessary, though lack of space, be kept together in flights until the moult is finished, but if you want to get the cocks in song early, it is much better to cage them up separately in about a month or so after they leave their parents.

CURE FOR BLINDNESS (D.W.).—If, as I assume, the pupils of the eyes turn a milky-white colour, the blindness is due to cataract, and nothing whatever will be of any use in curing it. If caged alone the bird will live quite comfortably, and may even sing after a time, but I would strongly advise you not to attempt breeding with it. If you do this you will in all probability establish a predisposition to blindness in your stock, which will cause you endless annoyance and loss in years to come.

NOT SINGING (Tottlia Everest).—He is probably only waiting for the spring zephyrs to blow, as many old birds do. In addition to the staple seed diet give him half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake, with two drops of cod liver oil emulsion mixed in it, and sprinkled with equal parts maw and gold of pleasure seed, every second day for a fortnight, and two crisp young leaves of dandelion daily. In the drinking water give 20 drops of whisky, 10 of lemon juice, and as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence every second day for a week, and in the following week give six drops of tincture of gentian and four of aromatic sulphuric acid every second day.

IN A BAD WAY (Miss A. Pugh).—I'm afraid the bird is in much too serious a condition to respond to any treatment. As you write of its staple diet as a certain firm's "food" a term which is applied to their speciality for certain soft-billed birds—I wonder whether you are using a seed mixture or a kind of meal. If the latter you had better send me a small sample. Meantime feed the bird on plain canary seed only, with a pinch of rape if obtainable every third day, and a few grains of hemp twice a week. Give a leaf of dandelion for preference each day as green food. In the drinking water give six drops of syrup of rhubarb, and as much sulphate of soda as will cover a sixpence every second day for a week, and in the following week give six drops of tincture of gentian and four of dilute sulphuric acid every second day, and 20 drops of Chemical Food on the alternate days. Report progress at end of fortnight.

EGGS DRYING UP (Disappointed).—Have you the present year's ANNUAL? If so, you will find this type of egg fully dealt with in the article therein from my pen. I cannot tell whether this egg would have been fertile or not, but these eggs which dry up in this way are not necessarily unfertile. Keep the hens that lay these eggs well supplied with cuttlefish, and clean gritty sand, and when they are about nesting again scatter a little finely mashed old mortar about the cage floors, and add a teaspoonful of limewater to each drinker should consult St. John's "Canary Breeding for Beginners" (1s.); House's "Canary Manual" (1/2); Battye's "Yorkshire Canaries" (1/1½); House's "Norwich Canaries" (1/1); Weston's "Stock Book" (7d.); Dr. Clarke's "Septic or Bird Fever" (7d.); Dr. Creswell's "Hygiene of Bird-keeping (1/1); Norman's "Aviaries, Bird-rooms, and Cages" (2/3); Ramsden's "Colour-feeding" (3½d.); "Seeds and Foods for Cage Birds" (1/2); or the "Nutshell" booklets (2½d. each): No. 5 "The Pet Canary," No. 6 "Ailing Birds and How to Cure them," No. 9 "The Disinfection of Cages, Bird-rooms, etc.," No. 10 "The Roller," No. 23 "The Border Fancy," No. 24 "Green Canaries." All thoroughly practical and instructive. Prices quoted are post free, from "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

every second day. For the next fortnight also add to their diet a morsel of bread and milk, lightly dusted with soft sugar every second day, and on the alternate days a small teaspoonful of a mixture of equal parts hemp, inga, millet, black rape, and linseed, and add 20 drops of Chemical Food to the water every second day during the same time.

IN A BALL (J.W.C.).—The birds are obviously in no form for breeding. Do you mean, by the way, that they are losing feathers? You should have been a little more explicit. Also you say they have been together since the third week in March, which I assume must mean February, as your letter would be written close on the heels of the third week in March, and if my assumption is correct, you put them together much too early. See they are free from cold draughts, and red mites. Give a pinch of Epsom salts in the water for one day, and afterwards give four drops each of tincture of gentian, tincture of calumba, and aromatic suphuric acid two days in every three for a week. Also add to the diet a small teaspoonful of egg food or crushed sponge cake with four drops of cod liver oil emulsion mixed in it, and sprinkled with maw seed every second day, and on the alternate days give a similar quantity of seed mixture, and two crisp young leaves of dandelion daily. If not more active at the end of a week write again, and give fuller particulars.

COLDS AND WHEEZING (B.P.C.).—The very best cure for this trouble, and one that is absolutely indispensable as a first step in every form of treatment, is to remove the cause. This I am pointing out almost every week. When this is done in many cases the cure may be safely left to Nature, which is far the best healer. Having seen to this part, and that the bird is in healthful surroundings, and quite free from cold draughts, give half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with three drops of cod liver oil emulsion mixed in it, and sprinkled with maw seed, every second day for a week or so, and on the alternate days 15 drops of the following mixture in the water: Two drams each of glycerine and oxymel of squills, one dram each of ipecacuanha wine and chlorodyne, and eight grains of iodide of potassium; any chemist will mix this for you.

THE PINK EYE (Ignoramus).—In this reply last week the comp. appears to have missed setting a line or more of MS. The reply should read: To see the pink eye, hold the bird in front of a window in a good light, with your head between the bird and the light and face turned from window. Let the light come over your shoulder on to the bird, and look at somewhere about an angle of 45 degrees. This may not be the exact angle required, but if you hold the bird in your hand and gently move it from one position to another, you will soon detect the pink eye, if it is there.

LAYING WITHOUT NEST (A.V.C.).—It is rather unusual for a hen to lay a clutch of eggs in the nest-box without any attempt at all to make a nest. I presume you offered her a supply of nesting material. When you saw she was about laying and did not attempt to make a nest, you should have just roughly shaped a little hair in the box, and then, when the full clutch of eggs was laid and you were about returning them to the nest for incubation, you could quite safely have ventured to make a proper nest for her, as described in "Canary Breeding for Beginners," when she would doubtless have accepted the new order of things, and hatched out the eggs in the ordinary course. Had she, however, refused to sit them, then you should have given them to another hen to hatch and rear, or have distributed them between two or three other hens with small clutches.

Answered by G. E. WESTON.

THREE-BY-SIX (Ignoramus).—This question is getting to be quite an old friend now. The generally accepted definition of a "three by six" Goldfinch is one which has the three outer feathers on each side of the tail marked with white underneath, towards the tip. Most Finches have but two feathers so marked.

HAWFINCH BREEDING IN CAPTIVITY (H.A.F.)—Mr. W. T. Page kindly draws my attention to the fact that Mr. W. E. Teschemaker bred the Hawfinch in his outdoor aviary in 1911. I could not call to mind who it was achieved this feat when I answered your letter in our issue of March 23rd.

THE CASE OF A LINNET (W.W.).—Of course, I cannot judge from your letter whether there is really anything wrong with the bird's leg. I doubt it, however, as many birds stand on one leg for long periods, especially if feeling a bit down in condition. Still, one would need to see and examine the bird to tell definitely. Judging by your letter as a whole, I should say that the Linnet is feeling the effects of its very late and prolonged moult. You are feeding him correctly and doing quite right in giving the hemp. Gather him some flowering groundsel and dandelion, and look out for chickweed and shepherds purse, allowing him a fair quantity daily. The best and cheapest "building up" medicine is compound syrup of hypophosphites B.P. (a form of Fellow's syrup). Get one ounce from a high-class chemist, and into two tablespoonfuls of drinking water stir 10 to 12 drops, giving this fresh daily for a week, and every other day (plain water in between) for a further period if it seems necessary. Let the bird indulge in a sun-bath whenever Phoebus shows his face, but beware of exposing him to cold, cutting winds.

NOT IN FULL SONG (M.T.).—Probably you are not feeding the bird generously enough; but you give me absolutely no information concerning your methods of management. I find that all too many of my correspondents seem to think bread and hemp seed or barley-meal and cheese the correct things for Thrushes, Blackbirds, and the like. Get "Nutshell" booklet No. 4 (post free 2½d.) and follow the advice given therein. Let your bird have a reasonable amount of live food daily—gentles, snails, mealworms, black beetles—and hang him in the sun whenever possible, but do not expose him to very cold winds.

A VARIED QUINTETTE (W. P. Q., Erdington).—(1) There is not the slightest danger to health in the keeping of birds in the room of a house. If there were, then I should not be answering queries at the present moment, I fancy, but have been engaged for long past in a far different pursuit, the exact nature of which I prefer not to prophesy, being by nature a bit of a pessimist. To return to business, however. (2) It would be much better to remove the wall-paper and coat the walls with sanitary washable distemper. It is an easy operation if you damp the paper and then fetch it off with a "scraper," the iron implement paper-hangers use for this purpose; it is also the finest thing out for scraping the draw-boards of cages at cleaning-out time. (3) You can certainly put both varieties of Canary in. For list of suitable foreign birds you must apply to our foreign bird expert, Mr. Page (vide rules). Put pairs of British birds in, and let them be Goldies, Linnets, Siskins, Bullies, Greenies, Redpolls, and Chaffinches—one pair of each. (4) Answered in number three. (5) There is a possibility, but it is very slight. Put in all Canary hens, and it would be a certainty; or you might put in cocks only of the Goldfinch, Linnet and Redpoll.

FEEDING A YELLOWHAMMER (Mrs. Atherton).—Yellowhammers live almost entirely upon canary seed, and this needs to be of the best quality. No other seed should be mixed with it. Sometimes they pick over a little wild-seed mixture with relish; or eat a little broken groats (or coarse oatmeal) and crushed hemp seed when supplied in a separate dish. They do not seem keen on green-food, but nibble at the small wild kinds (chickweed, shepherds purse, etc., and seeding grasses), also rape seedlings. To ensure them being in fine condition and health, get them to eat a little of a high-grade insectile food frequently, prepared in the usual way; also offer live-food according to season (mealworms, gentles, flies, grubs, smooth caterpillars, live ants' eggs, etc., and green-stuff infested with tiny insect life). I have found them partial to ants' eggs (the dried kind, of first-rate quality) which have been soaked in a little milk.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by WESLEY T. PAGE, F.Z.S., Etc.

A YOUNG GREY PARROT (M. Fish).—You do not say how you are feeding—keep it warm, out of draught, set in a well ventilated portion of the room. Sop a little household bread with warm water and chemical food (equal parts), sprinkle with moist sugar and well stir before supplying to the bird. Also supply boiled maize, canary seed, ripe fruit, shelled walnuts, and keep a piece of cuttlebone hanging within its reach—send me fullest details as to its condition, and your treatment ,and I will send you a postcard, as the case is urgent.

GOULDIAN FINCHES (J. P. Andrews).—Undoubtedly other things being equal, the showiest and brightest bird scores, but condition, steadiness, silky and sleek plumage, and a perfect specimen (that is, no claws missing, broken feathers, etc.,) are the main determining factors—however, rarity counts for something, and though in this respect there is nothing between the Red and Black-headed varieties, yet the fact remains that the former are not so numerous as the latter. There is a small balance in favour of the Read-head variety, but to be quite clear, a perfect R.H. would run a perfect R.H. very close, for there is little between them.

AILING BLUE-FRONTED AMAZON (Kintore Fox).—It is natural for Parrots to regurgitate the food; if it had a mate it would then feed it, but when kept singly they usually re-swallow the regurgitated food. Parrots often do this when being made a fuss of. A Hawk-headed Parrot of mine after doing so, would take my finger in its beak, just as if it had its mate's bill, and appeared quite content. I still think the "Spasms" are natural, but try the sedative given in my former reply. (In former replies I have really covered the ground so far as is possible from your data), or if you care, send me a stamped addressed envelope, and I will state the case plainer than I can here.

ROSE-CRESTED COCKATOO (H. R. Titswell).—Seed mixture: One quart each canary seed, and white millet, one pint each white oats and hemp, half-a-pint each paddy rice, maize, grit (not sand), shelled nuts, and sunflower seed, and one gill of chillies; well mix and keep a supply in the cage. Also supply ripe fruit, plain biscuit, green food, and keep a piece of clean cuttlebone in its cage. It is a hardy species, but must not be subjected to drought. In its native country it is of good repute as a talker, but in this country this is not so, but, still, I have come across quite talented birds of this species, so why not you too? Keep it, as soon as its tame in your living room, where it will have plenty to see and hear, put it, talk to it, and make a fuss of it generally (do not bid it though with table scraps and messes and sops), and it will sooner or later respond to a greater or lesser degree.

BREEDING BUDGERIGARS (Mrs. Jones).—If you carefully read up your booklet, pages 14 to 19, and also the note on "The cage," pages 22 and 23, you should not be in doubt, but I will deal with your present difficulties. I presume you have a pair, the cere of the male is blue, that of the female muddy brown. It is quite correct that these birds breed more readily where several pairs are kept together, but it is also equally true that a single pair will breed in a roomy cage, though they may take longer to make the start than they would flying together in a crowd in the aviary. If kept in an all-wire cage, the part containing the husk should be screened, and once they start to occupy the husk, do not pry into their arrangements—a box cage, if the husks are placed in the far corners of cage, supplies sufficient privacy. No nesting material is required. Supply as much seeding (flowering) grass in tufts as they will eat, but do not give it when tainted with frost. They should ultimately settle down to nest. Breeding time in this country all the year round, only stopping for the moult, and sometimes do not stop even for the moult.

COCKATIELS NOT SITTING STEADILY (Amateur).—It is full early yet, though some pairs of this species do act in the unsatisfactory way you name. You give me no idea of their quarters or nests, so it is difficult to give reason or suggest a remedy. Do they get disturbed by mice? Are their nests flat-bottomed? If so, I expect they give up in disgust. Take out their nests, well scald and clean, and then hang up again; with more genial weather, they may sit more steadily. There is nothing to equal a small barrel for Cockatiels or Parrakeets, but if they are to do any good in the breeding line their nests must have hollow bottoms to prevent the eggs rolling about, a barrel supplies this, and if it is hung up straight the sides of the barrel keep the eggs in one place about the centre, most necessary, as Cockatiels use no nesting material. If you care to give me fuller details I will try and point out cause in next issue.

AILING GREY PARROT (W. A. C.).—The bird has been mis-fed for a number of years, and it will be a work of time to get it fit again. Give Dinneford's Magnesia—one teaspoonful in two tablespoonfuls of water, as the day's supply of drinking water—every other day till the voidings become watery-loose, then cease the above till they become normal again; then give the magnesia as required to keep the bowels moving freely without being really loose. You must give boiled maize for a time (it must be made fresh daily), but dust it with flowers of sulphur for a month at least; also continue to give a little sop, but prepare it as follows—piece of stale bread, sprinkle with moist sugar, put over it one teaspoonful of chemical food, then as much boiling water as it will absorb, and when cool supply to the bird. Gradually lessen the quantity both of the sop and boiled maize, and as soon as it is in better condition wean it from both altogether. Supply a seed mixture of one quart each Canary and white millet, one pint each hemp and oats, and half a pint each grit (not sand), paddy rice, and sunflower seeds; well mix and keep supply in cage. Also supply ripe fruit, nuts, plain biscuits (dry), green food and cuttlebone. Nutshell, "The Grey Parrot," 2½d., from our Manager, will help you.

AILING GREY PARROT (D. Anderson).—Having been privately brought over, it should largely have escaped hardships of importation, and should be free from infection. Dissolve three grains of bromide of potassium in a little syrup (about two teaspoonfuls) and after draining the water away from the usual supply of maize, put the above over the maize, and as soon as it has soaked in supply to the bird; give this on two successive days, and after an interval of three days repeat the treatment, and then repeat again whenever you see signs of a ut coming on. Give Dinneford's Magnesia every other day—one teaspoonful in two tablespoonfuls of water, as the day's supply of drinking water, so long as the voidings are not watery loose, when the latter occurs you must cease giving the magnesia till they become normal again, and then give the laxative as required to keep the bowels moving freely without being really loose. Diet as follows: Continue boiled maize for the present. Seed mixture: One quart each Canary and millet seed, one pint each hemp and oats, half a pint each paddy rice, grit (not sand), and sunflower seeds; well mix and keep a supply in the cage. Also supply ripe fruit, shelled nuts, plain biscuit, and a little green food, and keep a piece of clean cuttle bone in the cage. Keep the bird warm, out of draught, yet in a well ventilated portion of the room. You should have written sooner, as in the initial stages the trouble would have yielded more easily to treatment. I certainly think there is a chance for the bird; report progress in, say, 10 days time. You had better get our Nutshell, "The Grey Parrot," 2½d. post free, from our Manager, and as soon as the present trouble ceases treat the bird as advised therein.

GREENHOUSE AVIARY (Avis).—(a) About one hundred, but to encourage breeding, not more than half the number. (b) Waxbills in variety, Bronzewing, Magpie, Tricolour, White-headed and Black-headed Mannikins, Bib, Spice, Ribbon, Grey Singing, Green Singing, Ruficauda, Cuban, Olive, Diamond, Long-tailed Grass, Masked, Red-headed, Zebra, Pileated, Saffron, Sharp-tailed, Striated, and Yellow-rumped Finches; Cape Canaries, Java Sparrows, Silverbills, Combassous, Paradise Whydah, Orange, Madagascar, Red-billed and Napoleon Weavers, Black-headed Siskin, Yellow-billed and Green Cardinals; all the above should be in pairs, and all are seed-eaters. (c) Laurel, acuba, laurestinus, privet, any kind of fruit trees, ivy, clematis, and roses. (de) A joiner will be able to do all that is required. Under the circumstances make the staging solid on top with lino or something similar, and net off the space underneath. You must leave no crevices, or it will mean many losses. (f) I consider you will have ample ventilation through the netting front of aviary, and the present ventilators, and there'll be less risk of draught—if at all, it must be on the south side. (g) Twiggy branches must be nailed or wired up, or dead firs, etc., planted in pots and boxes. Husks and nest boxes must be hung about and screened with twiggy branches; put up about 40, and distribute them as far apart as possible. Suspend husks from ridge of roof.

POST MORTEMS.

Mr. C. Yates, M.R.C.V.S., 2, College Road, Harrow, Middlesex, will examine and report upon dead cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for reply direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis, 21s. Subjects for post mortem examination must be sent packed in a box direct to Mr. Yates, with the fee, this and any accompanying letter being kept from contact with the dead bird. Send by letter-post; it is cheaper and quicker than parcel post. Any bodies sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

ILLUSTRATED IDEAS (A. Gardiner).—We are afraid hopper and perch are too well-known. (F. Kershaw). Have previously given this. (W. Williams). We believe this door is part of the registered design of a certain cage. (J. Calvert; H. Westerby; E. Symons). Have given similar ideas before. (P. Ware). We cannot quite grasp this notion.

Singing Contests.

BLACKBURN.

Blackburn quality Linnet S.A. have postponed their affiliated contest for time and quality until Whit Saturday through the coal strike. They will hold an open contest for quality only as usual on April 6. Prizes according to entries.—R. Hayhurst, Sec.

DURHAM.

Friendly Linnet sing held Braudon Colliery, March 30th, when 16 birds competed. Result: 1st, Briggs; 2nd, A. Bailes; 3rd, J. Mills. Judge, Mr. G. Reed (Brandon). Fanciers please note that the Easter contest at Thinford Inn, Ferryhill, will be postponed until further notice, owing to the coal strike.—G. Reed, Sec.

TYLDESLEY.

Union Arms Castle contest held March 30th for members only. Owing to the coal strike we reduced the entrance money. We did not touch the funds of the club for prizes, but decided to send two members with the birds for Blackburn affiliation contest, all birds and expenses to be paid for from the funds. Time: 1st, J. Harrison; 2nd, P. Owen; 3rd, J. Harrison. Quality: 1st, T. McWalters; 2nd, W. Molyneux.—J. Harrison, Sec.

LEIGH.

Globe Inn Linnet Club second club contest this season, held Mar. 30. Considering the state of the coal strike I consider the entry of 30 birds was very good, and some fine singing for time was done. But quality could have been better. We gave four prizes for each class. Winners for quality: 1, T. Statham; 2, Howcroft; 3, J. Statham; 4, Brown; for time: 1, R. Statham, 189; 2, Banks, 147; 3, Poole, 121; 4, Brown, 109. Judges, Messrs. J. W. Jones and J. Dobson; for time, Messrs. J. Statham and R. Disley; taskers, Messrs. McAllister and W. Parkinson; timekeeper, Mr. J. Amison. After the contest we discussed the affiliated contest to be held at Blackburn on Saturday, and we came to the conclusion it should be postponed. But there will be a contest on April 6 at Blackburn, for quality only. This is because the notice coming so late no one will be disappointed, and prizes will be given according to the number of birds entered. The above was considered and decided by J. McAllister and J. W. Jones, of Leigh; and W. H. Topping and J. Dobson, of Blackburn.—J. McAllister, Sec.

NEWTOWN (Leeds).

BRADFORD EAST O.S.

As the Easter excursions will be much interfered with owing to the coal strike, the annual Easter ramble, which has been arranged for Easter Monday by this society will probably have to be cancelled, and other arrangements made at meeting fixed for April 2. It was intended to go to Grassington, and as no particulars can yet be obtained as to whether there will be an excursion or not, it would be well if all members and friends intending to go on the ramble would ascertain for themselves what re-arrangements are made before taking any definite steps. This can easily be obtained from any of the members, who attend the meeting, or from myself. A notice will be published in the Press, if at all possible.—H. Hill, Sec.

LANCASHIRE & LIZARD F.A.

Special meeting held Old Boar's Head, Manchester, a good number of members being present. After the usual business we had a discussion as to place for holding our annual tea, social, and presentation of prizes. It had been fixed for April 13th, but on making further inquiries it was decided to have same April 20th, at The Old Boar's Head, Manchester, when Mr. Slater promises us a first-class tea. Tickets for tea will be 2s. a head, and all intending being present will help me very much in letting me know as early as possible, so that all arrangements can be made at an early date. I am requested to make it clear that ladies especially are invited, so buck up you gentlemen, and bring your wives, sisters, friends, etc., and make it a success. I shall be pleased to hear of anyone who will help to make a pleasant evening in giving songs, etc., so that a programme can be arranged. Am pleased to say that our old and respected friend and Lizard enthusiast, Mr. Ollerenshaw, sen., joined us once again. Plenty of room yet for more members; full particulars on application. Names of winners in Lancashire and Lizard sections were read out:—Champion Lancashires: A. Horden, 136 points; T. H. Collinge, 72; J. Garner, 69; J. Vickers, 57; N. Stansfield, 28; E. Fuller, 18; J. Eaton occupied chair, and was ably supported by the donors, also by Mr. J. W. Metcalfe (Liverpool). After full justice had been done to the good things provided by the host and hostess, the evening was spent in speeches and songs, and, needless to say, all were too sorry when time for parting was called. The following artistes provided the entertainment: Messrs. R. Simpson (actor vocalist), M. Jones (humorist), H. Mullock, Master Mullock, L. Halstead, J. Mercer, T. Jones, A. Christopher. Messrs. Willis, Fararre, and T. Ellison officiated at the piano.—A. Wilkinson, Hon. Sec.

Committee meeting held Market Tavern, Bradford, Mar. 23, Mr. R. Garnett presiding. Following resignations accepted with regret: Messrs. E. Field, W. Bearpark, A. Wright and Son, J. A. Taylor, A. Price, and J. Wilcock, the latter gentleman in particular, the Secretary's first acquaintance of him being at a Bradford show, where he had about 24 birds on exhibition. Decided, to hold annual meeting April 20th, 6.30 p.m., in the Market Tavern, Godwin Street, Bradford, when several matters of vital importance to the club will be under discussion, amongst others the evergreen "star or not star competing birds." Will all members kindly read Rule 5 in handbook? There are still a few members who are backward with their subs.; if this should catch their eye, look up any of committeemen, who will gladly accept same. —Grayshon and Allen (Secs.).

Through a Bird-Room Window.

By the Rev. C. D. FARRAR.

The Red Rosella, a brilliantly arrayed member of the Parrot family, is the subject of No. 23 of the New Series by this popular author and aviculturist.

THE aviculturist's life is one of perpetual looking forward, and notwithstanding the gibes of the comic papers, he is the most hopeful of men—he must be—or he would soon "go mazed," as Devonshire folk say. For years and years I looked forward to getting a pair of Red Rosella Parrakeets. It is generally possible to get a cock, as he is a favourite show bird; and after the shows are over, and he has done a lot of winning, his ungrateful owner proceeds to offer him for sale, at the modest, but to him remunerative figure of two guineas.

The difficulty always is to get a hen. I went for years before I could light on one, and then all of a sudden the luck turned. Fortune often favours me, as it often favours the first efforts of the gambler, and doubtless for the same reason—to lead me on to my destruction.

Never Mind the Price.

One day I was scanning the sale columns, and my eyes nearly dropped out of my head, for I read: "A pair of Red Rosella Parrakeets for sale anxious to go to nest." Never mind what the price was; that's another story, as Kipling says. Need I tell my readers that those birds were very shortly located at Micklefield, in the County of Yorkshire. What though I already possessed a cock Rosella? Could I not sell him, and so win back part of the price of my pair? When I opened the soap box in which my new treasures had arrived, I was fairly delighted with my bargain, and, like Robinson Crusoe, I felt that I could start with "a good heart and modest confidence."

My first task was to get them out of the box; and as I could see a very big and ugly looking beak nosing around the small air holes, I felt that it would be better for me, and more pleasant for the birds if I just loosened one end of the lid, and let them come out "motu proprio," as His Holiness at Rome is wont to say. Mind you, I wasn't afraid—but I thought it was no use to run unnecessary risks!

A Gorgeous Creature.

The Red Rosella is a gorgeous creature. The first I ever saw was outside a cottage at Lewisham, when I was a curate. I could never go by that house without stopping to look at him. The old lady told me that her son, who was a sailor, had brought the bird over as a present. The head, sides of face back of the neck, and the breast are brilliant crimson. The chin and upper parts of the throat are pure white. The feathers on the back are very dark green, broadly edged with light green. The upper tail coverts are green, the shoulders a lovely lilac, mingled with black. The centre feathers of the tail are dull green, and the others lilac, deeping towards the base.

The sexes are good to tell, as the cock is far more brilliant in all his colours, and his head is more flattened and cruel looking than in the hen, and he is considerably bigger.

The hen has a small and very rounded head, her white is more dirty, and she has a dull band of green running down from the crown to the nape of the neck.

The gentleman from whom I got the birds was an old friend, and a noted aviculturist; and he told me that the year before the Rosellas had gone to nest, and laid eggs and hatched young, but that the chicks had died. I wondered at his selling them under these circumstances, but after all it was no business of mine; and his loss was certainly my gain.

I felt so proud of my new purchase that I could not rest till I had got a friend to come and look at them. I am always slow to trust my own judgment. I have always found that, whenever I thought a heap of anything I owned, there was nothing like getting the other fellow's views expressed in figures, and the other fellow is usually a pessimist at such times. I was therefore agreeably surprised then on asking my friend what he thought of the pair, and their probable value; he described them as the finest pair he had ever seen, and very cheap at £3. As I had given considerably less than this sum, I patted myself on the back, and felt very good.

I had at the time I am telling of a beautiful empty aviary, quiet, well sheltered, and with a most alluring log within the sleeping place—a log, as I said to myself, that would compel any self respecting pair of Rosellas to go to nest.

Grappling with the Mice Problem.

I have found that one of the great drawbacks in breeding Parrakeets is mice. The horrid little beasts run up the wooden sides of the houses, get into the logs, and frighten the sitting hens to death. My first care therefore is to make their presence impossible. I learnt the way of doing this by a visit to the splendid aviaries of my friend, Mr. Fasey. All round the bottom of his spacious buildings he has sheets of galvanised iron nailed. This renders the upward passage of the mice quite impossible. If they get into the aviary by some mischance, they can only run round and round the floor till an avenging foot arrives and ends their evil lives. The plan is simplicity itself, and it is absolutely effectual. If mice can get to the logs, good-bye to any hopes of success. The hens will absolutely refuse to sit; no self-respecting Parrakeet could withstand the shock of a mouse running about under her breast at midnight; she would be bound to come off; and then a nest of eggs is spoilt!

For years I tried to breed Parrakeets, where mice had free access to the nests, but I never succeeded. When you make a mistake, don't make the second one—keeping it to yourself. Own up. The time to spot out rotten eggs is in the nest. The deeper you hide them in the case, the longer they stay in circulation, and the worse impression they make when they finally come to the breakfast table. I have confessed my error, therefore take warning, and before you attempt to breed Parrakeets, make sure that the mice are effectually shut out.

A Sure Sign of Nesting Operations.

I turned my new friends into their mouse-proof aviary, and anxiously awaited developments. I had not long to wait. Hardly had they been in the place a week when I saw the floor beneath the log littered with fragments of rotten wood. This I knew to be a sure sign of nesting operations, and when a few mornings later I caught the lady actually in the log, as Mrs. Nickleby said on an historic occasion, "it came upon me like a flash of fire, and almost frozo my blood." Still, I knew that I was still a long way off my journey's end.

After some days of patient waiting, I thought that eggs ought to have been laid, and I determined to see if it was so. In the game of life, as in the game of cards, you must always have your stakes on the table; so wrote Balzac. I always have my stakes on the table, and am ready to risk my all at any moment. It was so in this case; but I fell, as did the lepers of old, who paid a visit to the Syrian camp. "If we remain here we die, and if we go forward we can but perish." If the worst came to the worst, the hen would desert the eggs. If I did not look I felt that something in my anatomy was bound to give way. I accordingly just "pepped," as an old Yorkshire dame once said to me about the arrival of a baby. I just pepped, and there they were, four of the loveliest, roundest, whitest, most seductive looking eggs you ever saw. I hastened away, hoping my friends had not noticed me. They were suspicious clearly, and with the brute creation, as with men, the best rule in such a case is to act naturally, with more quickness than usual, and give them time to get over their suspicions. The next time I came back I was relieved to see only the cock about, as it was clear that the lady had returned to her domestic duties.

A Bold and Somewhat Aggressive Gentleman.

The cock Rosella is generally a bold and somewhat aggressive gentleman; in fact, when kept by himself for exhibition purposes he decidedly suffers from swelled head. At such times he will swagger and bluster like a bully. "Nemo me impune lacessit." At home his watchword is: "Blessed are the meek." When the hen is sitting, the utmost he will venture is just to go to the edge of the log hole and peep in; but the rapid way in which he draws his head back tells an onlooker that the signals are set at "Danger."

One day my patience was rewarded by hearing those curious grating asthmatic sounds, which tell an experienced listener that baby Parrakeets have arrived; and I was further cheered by seeing Papa enter the log and remain quite a long time. Of course, I know that he could be only doing one thing—feeding—and when after twelve days the missus joined him at the seed tray, I felt that the medal was my own. Alas, I was wrong. Aviculture is a good deal like a nigger's wool—it doesn't look very deep, but there are a heap of kinks and curves in it. It was so in this case.

When the young—there were three of them—were nearly a month old, something went wrong. What it was I could never find out, but the old birds ceased to feed. I was like the boy who was chased by the bull, open to congratulation because he reached the tree first, and to condolence because a fellow up a tree in the middle of a forty-acre lot, with a disappointed bull for company, is in a mighty bad fix. So was I. I had managed to get a nest of young Rosellas, but alas! I was in as bad a fix as the poor boy; for how was I going to keep them alive?

A Moment of Despair.

There is nothing so impossible to feed as a baby Parrakeet. I know the books say, "Fill your mouth with seed, chew it well and patiently, and then insert the baby's beak into your mouth, and let it feed at leisure." You may insert the baby's beak as much as you like, but there will be no tender response; but only an obstinate struggle to get free. I knew what the end would be; it was only a question of time, and I should have a lovely set of corpses to bury; and so it was. Evening saw the end of all my hopes. I recalled the classic scene of Xerxes at Salamis, mourning over his vanished hosts. He counted them at break of day. And when the sun set, where were they? I know where mine were—in a nice little hole in the garden, like poor Bach, rapidly decomposing.

I don't think I ever quite got over the shock of their loss, and when I got a good offer for the treacherous pair, I let them go. The buyer had been worrying me for months to sell them, until by his continual coming he wearied me.

There is a story told of a lady, one of a party travelling in Egypt. They were in one of the smaller deserts and were short of water, and the lady added to the cheerlessness of the occasion by moaning without ceasing. "Oh, how thirsty I am!" The other members of the party endured the monotonous cry for some hours, but at last one gentleman exclaimed desperately, "Here is the last water; for goodness sake give it her, even if the rest of us have to perish." That was the way I felt; so I let them go. They say that every dog has his day, and every cat her afternoon; for myself I felt that the evening had come; at any rate for the moment.

And then, as one of life's "little ironies," a few mornings after my sad loss I got a letter from my friend Mr. Oates in Leeds. "Come and see me on Tuesday; I have got four young Red Rosellas out of the nest." I went, but Marius sitting on the ruins of Carthage was not more sad. I tried to say I was glad; but oh, it was so hard!

THE MIGHTY MITE:

How He May be Avoided, or Exterminated.

By CLAUDE ST. JOHN

Canary Expert to "Cage Birds."

Now that the breeding season is with us, and the hot weather fast approaching, these hints upon dealing with the red-mite will be found of great value.

ALTHOUGH so small and insignificant in appearance, the red-mite possesses a power for evil out of all proportion to its almost microscopic size. Its presence in cages very considerably affects the comfort of one's pets, and not infrequently turns the scale on the wrong side for the breeder of birds. Questions concerning this pest reach me with such regularity week by week that I have taken a comprehensive one just to hand to deal with in this prominent way, so that readers may easily keep these notes handy for future reference at any time when the red-mite becomes troublesome.

Habits by Day and Night.

"I should like to know more of their habits," writes the querist in the case referred to. The leading features in connection with their habits are repeated constantly. Though they feed upon the body—or, rather, the blood; for they are as much blood-suckers as leeches—they do not live upon the bird's body; neither will they ever be found there during the day unless it is in some quite exceptional and neglected case.

The insects are nocturnal in their habits, and only come out of their haunts after the birds have settled down to roost at night. Before morning they again retire, and hide away in and about the vicinity of the cage, in any kind of crack or crevice—at ends of perches, in joints of doors, vacant wire or nail holes, or even any slight roughness of surface in the cage or on the wall adjacent to where the cage hangs. The tiniest hole or crack is sufficient to harbour scores or hundreds of them, and it is only by the closest scrutiny, and that, too, not infrequently with a trained eye, that a colony can be detected; but probing any suspected place with a pin will often cause a great revelation.

The Mites' Remarkable Vitality.

One certain indication of the presence of mites, however, will always appear more or less about an infested cage. There will be a white powdery appearance at various points. On close inspection this will be seen to consist of very minute white dots adhering to the surface. This is the spoor of the mites, and generally shows first around the edges of the harbouring-places, and a cage on which it appears is to a certainty infested with mites. It is in these lurking places where the mites breed; here they lay their tiny, transparent, colourless eggs, barely visible to the naked eye, which in due course hatch out into greyish-white mites, so small that a number of them might run about on the head of an ordinary pin. They assume the blood-red colour of the parents—very frequently, if not invariably, with a white mark upon the centre of the back—in a short time after beginning to prey upon the birds.

Whether frost kills them, as this correspondent asks, I do not know, not having experimented in that line, but from what I have learnt of their vitality I suspect that if there were a fairly good harbour to which they would undoubtedly retire, and in which they would probably hybernate, no ordinary degree of frost would affect them much. Neither can I say definitely whether they live from year to year. Probably they do not in the same sense that individuals would survive to be a year or more old, though the autumn crop of mites, I have no doubt whatever, will survive, even under adverse circumstances, quite long enough to found new colonies in the following spring, whilst it is practically certain that the eggs laid in the autumn will be retarded by the cold, and only hatch in the warmth of spring.

An Interesting Experiment.

An experiment—one of a series—I made some years ago goes to prove the first point. A number of mites were enclosed in a practically air-tight, glass-topped metal box in October without so much as a feather, or particle of anything that might serve as food for them. They were kept in a quite cold place during a cold, damp and frosty winter, yet it was near the middle of February, four months later, before a death occurred among them, and they retained their activity to the end. The last survivor died after just over eighteen weeks' isolation. How long they might have existed had a feather or two, or a few droppings from a cage, been enclosed with them is problematical. I am convinced they will exist in an uncleaned cage without the presence of living birds for very many months, though they are probably breeding all the time, and it is not always the same individuals that are there.

In another experiment a few mites were placed in a small glass tube and kept until eggs had been deposited. The mites were then discarded, and the tube containing the eggs hermetically sealed, again without a particle of any form of sustenance. In a few days' time the eggs hatched out, and nearly a month later some of the young mites were still actively running about. These cases are eloquent proof of the utter uselessness of half measures or fitful efforts in attempting to get rid of a red mite infestation.

My correspondent goes on interrogatively, "Although breeding in birds best, can they multiply without," etc. Here is a very common error. Far from breeding best upon the birds, they do not breed upon them at all, but, as already stated, in the haunts where they secrete themselves by day, and their capability of multiplication without the presence of birds at all is made sufficiently clear above.

Early Mules.

Sir,—Having been a reader of Cage Birds for a considerable time, I should like to know if any other reader has been successful in breeding Mules before March 28? On that date I hatched four young from four eggs, all of which are strong and doing well.

A. Butler.

[Mr. Butler's Mules are early, but very many earlier instances have been recorded from time to time in our columns—one, for instance, this season (vide issue of Feb. 24), of Goldfinch Mules hatched on Feb. 1.—Editor.]

Prize Money at Guisborough Show.

Sir,—Concerning my letter in Cage Birds of Feb. 10 re prize money at the above-named show, I had a most courteous letter from Mr. Cook, the chairman, asking for full particulars to lay before the committee. Mr. Cook has now remitted me the prize-money, as he found that it had not been paid. I exonerate him and his committee from all blame, as they were quite unaware of the way in which I had been treated.

Esparto Grass.

Sir,—If your correspondent, Mr. Gale, only requires a supply for his own use, I will be pleased to send him a little gratis. Should a large quantity be required, I will endeavour to put him in communication with a firm.

J. Steel.

119, High Street, Dalkeith.

Sir,—If Mr. Gale will send his address to me, with stamps to pay postage, I will try and send him sufficient grass for his purpose. That is, if he cannot get it elsewhere.

Main Road, Tweedmouth. A. Hay.

Sir,—I noticed a letter in last week's Cage Birds from Mr. J. Gale re the above. Does Mr. Gale require this as nesting material for his British birds, or does he want to use it for catching purposes? I have a bunch or two in my bird house here which I have no use for, and I shall be pleased to send Mr. Gale on some, gratis, if he lets me know. This grass is quite fresh and strong, and makes grand suitable building material for Bullfinches and other British birds. For catching purposes nothing can beat it. It is in various lengths. Perhaps Mr. Gale will let me know what he requires it for.

A Nightingale Heard in a Favourite Haunt.

Sir,—I thought it would be of interest to record that I heard the Nightingale for the first time this year on March 27 in the neighbourhood of Ashstead, Surrey. On that evening I heard three of these lovely songsters answering one another, and one singing in the very same tree which they frequented last year. This part of Surrey is indeed favoured by the presence of these beautiful songsters during the summer months. What is more pleasant than to be right out in the midst of the country at midnight on a lovely summer's evening listening to the Nightingales singing away, answering each other all around, and whose song is heard so clear above all the stillness of the night?

The Type of Present-day Norwich Plainheads.

Sir,—Now that this subject has been mentioned, perhaps you will allow a little discussion on the different types of special winners. I have visited a good many shows this last season, and it is surprising the difference in type of the birds that our judges select to award the special for best Norwich. But as an illustration of what I mean, I will take only two birds, both of which were at the Palace, and both of which belong to one stable. I refer to the unflighted Buff, winner of diploma at the Palace, a bird which seems to have come into his own at last, an honour which he has, in my opinion, merited more times than once at previous shows. I think this bird is the nearest approach to the ideal Norwich we have had yet; and, as your reporter truly said, he has a great career before him. The other bird I refer to is the unflighted yellow belonging to the same owner, winner of many 1sts and some specials, but which was relegated to the cards at the Palace, owing, it is said, to some missing tail feathers. Here we have two birds belonging to the same owner, very dissimilar in type. Take the Buff: he is of beautiful type and colour, feather of lovely texture, and shines like satin; has not a feather out of place; in fact, he might be carved from wax; he has a rare head and a bold eye, and stands well up from, but still across, the perch. He is of good size without being a monster, still plenty big enough for a show bird. The yellow is a very big bird—we might say a monster—for an unflighted; good shape, big broad head, nice feather and quality—and you have finished. Against his good points we have to weigh his bad ones, which are: beetle brows, or what we may term overhanging eyebrows; and crouching on the perch. Speaking for myself, I do not think there is any comparison between the birds as show birds. But the point I want to draw your readers' attention to is: the yellow was awarded special for best Norwich at probably the largest show of Norwich this last season. Now, for a bird to win special for best, it must be something approaching the ideal—something the like of which we must all try to breed. If so, then those fanciers who have seen the yellow bird with the special ticket on him must try to breed beetle-browed birds, and birds which crouch; while those who were at the Palace and saw the buff win the diploma must naturally take him as their ideal. I hope readers see my point. I am fortunate enough to have seen both birds, and know which I would sooner have—as a show bird, of course; but if some fanciers take a bird like the yellow one as an ideal to work to, while others work to one like the buff, there is every probability of different types and opinions in the near future. I hope the owner of these two birds will pardon the liberty I have taken in bringing them to the notice of your readers. My motive in selecting these two birds as an illustration is because one is undoubtedly the best unflighted buff out, while, in the opinion of some, the other is the best yellow; and because both birds have won the special at big shows, while being so dissimilar in type, they best answered my purpose. I am not quite certain which bird it is that the friend of Mr. Woollard wouldn't have in his room; but I can give a pretty shrewd guess. There seems to have been grumbling about this bird, but I have heard the remark passed that he is worth his weight in gold—as a stock bird.

Show Dates in Ireland.

Sir,—Seeing in a recent issue that Lurgan have fixed their date now for Nov. 22 and 23, might I point out to them that this date Holywood have the claim to? Cannot they find a date without clashing with other shows? First they took the date from Larne; now from Holywood. Would the date which "Exhibitor" mentions in his letter of the 9th inst. not suit Lurgan? If they persist in taking the date from Holywood, it spells ruin for their show and Holywood also, as exhibitors cannot support both.

The Lady's Slight Mistake.

Sir,—I have read with some interest the "Twittering" re the "Lady's Slight Mistake" in your issue of the 23rd inst., and have wondered upon what merits such an enlightened person was voted to the exalted position of secretary to the R.S.P.B. "Too funny" is putting the matter very lightly, especially if the two young women vindicated bring an action against her for damages, and who are no doubt quite as much "young ladies" as the person who does not know the difference between a mascot and a live bird. I have also wondered who the "healthy young English footballers" would prefer to walk out with—the persons who encourage their healthy English game or the person who has nothing more "English" to do than to look for trouble and libel respectable young Englishwomen? Would it not be wise to warn the members of Cage Birds League to keep an eye open in the event of their badge catching the eye of the worthy lady mentioned above? She might think the birds were real 'uns!

A Point Concerning Bullfinch Hybrids.

Sir,—I have just come across an old report of a bird show held at the People's Palace in November, 1888. The report runs: "I also noted a splendid Bullfinch and Canary Mule—in fact, the best that I have ever seen, as it showed distinctly both crosses." Perhaps some of our numerous old breeders may remember this show, also the bird referred to. I am still very doubtful that the Bully was the male parent. It must have been the other way about—i.e., the Canary being the male. According to the Palace Show report of 1885, a Hybrid was shown as a Bully-Redpoll. In the report of the Palace in 1886 in Hybrids there are Bully-Linnet, Bully-Goldfinch; surely these are similar mistakes? Perhaps some of your readers may remember the shows. Mr. J. F. Hills was one of the judges in the British in those days; he might remember these birds.

[We do not think that any importance, so far as indicating the respective sexes of the parents is concerned, can be attached to the fact that the word Bullfinch was printed first.—Editor.]

Ought Closed Rings to be Abolished?

Risking Ones Best Birds.

Sir,—Your correspondent "Old Fancier" wishes "to hear the experiences of others amongst your readers about these closed rings." I fear that the number of Canary breeders who can give him actual experiences is limited to those who are unfortunately compelled to ring their young birds in accordance with the rules of the special club to which they belong—the British Roller Club, and I believe one or two others—while yet other clubs entirely prohibit their use. I have never rung a Canary with a closed ring, and never mean to. The objections to the use of these rings are put so well in the letter of "Old Fancier," and in the extracts which he gives from the opinions of that very experienced hand, Mr. John Robson, that it is quite unnecessary for me to dilate upon them. Suffice it to say, that I agree with these gentlemen in every particular (only even more so). In my mind's eye I can see the ordinary working man fancier, and the very best among Canary breeders belong to this class, taking in his hands, which have become hardened by honest toil, and have lost all delicacy of touch, in the left hand a tiny mite of a bird, six or seven days old, featherless, and without a set bone in its little body, and in the right hand a metal band, an eighth of an inch in diameter and in width. I can see him first looking at his prospective champion, then at the metal ring (if he has not in the meantime dropped it), and ultimately, if he is sensible, putting back the young bird into the snug nest from which he has just taken it. No, Mr. Editor, I don't think that many fanciers will be found willing to risk the utter spoiling of a bird which might ultimately win them fame and profit on the show bench. Of course, if they have to, as in the case of Roller Canary breeders, it is a different story, but without compulsion the use of closed rings will never become general. The difficulty of fixing them, and the danger of damage to potentially valuable birds will for ever preclude their general adoption. Now for your question, "Ought closed rings to be abolished?" As a humanitarian bird-keeper, my answer is yes. But how is it to be done? Better leave it alone to the common sense of Canary breeders, who will never adopt it unless they are unfortunate enough to be members of the individual specialist clubs which render it compulsory.

Another Old Fancier.

Repeatedly Seen Chicks Maimed.

Sir,—I was much interested in "Old Fancier's" letter, and can fully endorse his statements as to the difficulty with closed rings. I have repeatedly seen chicks maimed by the parents in their endeavour to remove them. I have conversed with various fanciers, and a summary of their objections may be worthy of consideration. In the first place, it is unwise to thus interfere with a feeding hen at such a critical period. Secondly, so many fanciers are utterly unable to perform the operation that there is always a grave risk attached. So grave is this risk that, though I have myself rung many birds, I certainly would not undertake to ring valuable stock for another fancier. The claim that closed rings are valuable as a means of identification can bear a double interpretation, one of which is sinister, inasmuch as many fanciers object to certain marks (or labels) on show cages, denoting that the bird is shown by a member of a certain club, especially when, as sometimes happens, it is conditional that the judge be also a member of that club. Many refuse to support shows where such conditions obtain, and if we begin with rings we shall probably have similar recriminations and reprisals. Another objection is that these rings are liable to chip the eggs prematurely during incubation. Many Canaries lay eggs which are deficient in shell, and this is further accentuated by a certain action (change) during incubation, which renders the shell very liable to fracture by contact with the edge of the rings. Let us consider the advantages claimed by those who advocate their adoption, viz., an infallible means of ascertaining the age of a bird, and also of identifying any given bird. Now I have been informed that any ring, other than an enamel ring, can be transferred. I myself don't think this to be possible with aluminium rings. Perhaps some jeweller reader could let us know. But as the unscrupulous breeder can nominate any of his stock as being the parents of certain rung birds, the identificatory value is not primarily a proof of pedigree, though by a system of universal registration (which is out of question) such might in time become recognisable as such. This would mean that all fanciers, however famous, especially if living in any outlying districts, who were unable to, or unwilling to, conform to this system, would be placed in a most unfortunate position. Again, a monopoly is intolerable, therefore we shall probably have a variety of rings, each conferring certain privileges in which the other is debarred from participating. This brings about that farcical competition in which an obviously inferior specimen beats a champion! In conclusion, I may say that in my opinion the adoption of closed rings would bring about a state of affairs, the evils of which would far outweigh any advantages derived by their use.

Sus-Arde.

Whole-hearted Condemnation.

Sir,—Your correspondent signing himself "Old Fancier" is fully deserving of the thanks of all fanciers who have the welfare of the hobby at heart. I can from my own experience bear out all he says against the use of marking rings, as being dangerous. I tried it a few times, but never again. On one occasion I put a young one about five days old along with three others the same age that were doing well, and in order to distinguish it I put a ring on it. I then placed it carefully in the nest, and left the room. Later on I went up to feed the birds. On entering the room my attention was drawn to the cage into which I had placed the young bird, by seeing the hen excitedly moving about with what, on closer examination, I found to be the young bird I had previously rung. I put it into the nest again, and retired to a safe distance to watch events. I had not long to wait. In a very short time she had the youngster out again, and was carrying him about suspended by the ring. I came to the conclusion at once that I must take the ring off if I wanted to have the bird reared. This ring, being one of the split kind, I thought I could take off easily, but with the bird being so young and its leg so tender, it was no easy job. However, it got reared successfully, along with the others, and turned out a fine bird. I fancy I can hear someone saying, how did I know? Well, I called him the "bent leg cock" ever after; and I would suggest if the use of closed rings becomes general that the classification at the various shows might be extended, to read something like this: "Bent or broken-legged, slip or deformed claws, yellow or buff." Such a class will be sure to fill well. I have tried what has proved to be a very successful plan to distinguish young birds, when it is necessary to mix them with others. My plan is to cut the down of the head of the young one that I intend to transfer. By this means you can trace which one it is up to about a fortnight old, and you can transfer three or even four. Just simply clip the down of the right side of the head of No. 1, the left side of No. 2, both sides of No. 3, and both sides and the tuft on the back of the head of No. 4. Make a note of this, and by the time they are feathered a little you will be able to find some other mark of identification that can easily be followed up. This method has proved to be successful as far as I am concerned. But you must remember that a young bird is very bad to handle when even a week old, and it is very sensitive to the least touch. They will hold up their head when least expected, but, to make sure that they will not move, I fill their crops before I start the operation. I hope that this simple method may be the means of some fanciers being able to distinguish their young ones, even after having mixed them up, and without the most dangerous marking rings.

A Strain of "All Whites" in New Zealand.

Sir,—Your readers may be interested to hear that I have had a very good season, finishing up with just fifty White Canaries. I have had eight nests from white hens mated to white cocks, and all the young from them being white, it looks as though the white is fixed in my type, and as though they will continue to breed true.

Rough on Red Mite.

Sir,—I am sending you a good "Red-mite resister" for nest pans. First, pour some boiling water over a good-sized piece of tobacco. Soak the nest pans in this for a time, and then let them dry. Next, rub the pans all over, inside and out, with a rag wetted with paraffin. Squeeze the soaked tobacco as dry as possible, and put a layer in the bottom of the pan. Over this shake some tobacco ashes which have been saved from pipe-smoking, and place the nest-lining in position. No red mite will go near a pan so treated.

The Midland Counties Yorkshire Canary Club.

Sir,—With your kind permission, I should like to call the attention of Midland Yorkshire Canary breeders to the above club, hoping to get them to join. The benefits of such a club are exceptional in the Midlands, and why more fanciers do not join is puzzling to me, as our patronage is given to Midland shows only. And as most of the fanciers support the shows where our patronage is given, surely it would be greatly to their benefit to join, as in addition to the prizes offered by the managers where our patronage is given, they would get the benefit of our specials tacked on to their wins. Considering, too, that the annual subscription is only the nominal one of 2s. 6d., with 1s. nomination, I see no reason why the club should not become as strong as some of the Northern specialist clubs. Fanciers joining can with confidence rely on the interests of the Yorkshire fanciers being well looked after, and the greater the membership the better the officers of the club will be able to do this. Now, fanciers, let me urge you all to join, and so push the variety you are interested in to the front; and what better way can this be done than by a specialist club as above? Any information will be gladly given by applying to the hon. secs., Beck and Andrews, School House, Rookery Road, Handsworth, Staffs.

The Troubles of Exhibitors in the United States.

Sir,—I would like exhibitors in England to know what we have to contend with in the United States. I sent four Yorkshires from here (New York) to the last Boston Poultry and Pet Stock Show. First they cost me 8s. to enter; then 9s. 3d. for carriage. The show lasted from Tuesday till Saturday. I won 3rd prize, 8s. My birds were supposed to leave for New York on the midnight train, Saturday. Sunday I went to the express office, went through all the baggage cars which were full of poultry, but no cage birds. I wrote to Boston right away. Monday I telephoned (3s. 6d.), but could get no satisfaction. Tuesday I telegraphed and paid reply (3s.); no answer. Wednesday morning birds arrived; three dead, and one which I managed to pull round. Tried to claim from express people; nothing doing. Can get no answer to letters or telegrams from poultry people; no prize money sent, and this show was held in January. Instead of leaving Boston on Saturday, the birds were left in the hall and the caretaker shipped them off on Tuesday; so anyone can see where the fault lies. The birds that I imported from Mr. H. Peverall stand this climate very well, and I am glad to say that with all my reverses I am going very strong. I hope to look up some of the bird rooms when I come over to England next summer. Pleased to say I receive my Cage Birds every Monday regularly, ten days after English exhibitors get theirs. I always look forward to it. I would like a coloured plate of the Green Bulbul. They cost as much as £10 here, and yet I see them in Cage Birds at 4s. 6d. each; quite some difference in price.

Proposed Norwich Plainhead Club for the Midlands.

Sir,—I, like "Suh Rosa," greatly favour the idea of the formation of a club, and I pen these lines with the good wish of prosperity from every Plainhead fancier of our society. In going through no less than eleven catalogues, I find that the Norwich are as strong [illegible] and the Midlands as anywhere in the country, then why should we be backward in coming forward? Now, then, you fanciers of the Midlands—I mean Nottingham, Leicester, Birmingham, Coventry, Hucknall Torkard, Stratford-on-Avon, Longton, Stoke, Hanley, Leek, West Bromwich, Birmingham, and many others, too numerous to mention—don't think this is like last Saturday's English Cup semi-finals, for there is a goal to be reached, and it can be done with pluck and determination. So let us put our heads together and arrange a place for a meeting, and get well along before the new season approaches upon us.

J. Gibbons.

Hon. Sec., Wolverhampton C.B.S.

Sir,—In spite of "Sub Rosa's" comment of last week, I still contend that there is no necessity for a Norwich Specialist Club in the Midlands, and that if one were formed it would have to be successful almost beyond possibility to justify its existence when a strong Specialist club is already at work in that district for that variety. I am sure that "Sub Rosa" does not wish me to understand that he believes a multitude of small specialist clubs are advantageous or efficient. No. The greater strength would be attained if there were one supreme specialist club in the kingdom for each important established variety. There should be as many local societies as possible to fulfil useful as well as ornithological obligations, but the idea of the duties of a specialist club are: (1) The safeguarding of the interests of its variety; (2) distribution of complete information on that variety; (3) institution of competitions for the breed on a larger scale than could be promoted by local societies; and (4) its encouragement and extension in all districts. By this you will see that I am not in favour of specialisation in the competitions promoted for special breeds. A fancier's natural ambitions would lead him to look for the most extensive conquests, but the winning of the cup or trophy of these specialist clubs must become easier and carry less honour as their numbers increase "Sub Rosa" as good as suggests that the Norwich Plainhead Club should confine its sphere of interests to Lancashire. I am quite sure that if it did so it would gain enormously in strength of membership and finances, and, as "Sub Rosa" admits, what opposition or competition newer and smaller clubs could put up could well be disregarded. But the fanciers at the helm of the Norwich Plainhead Club have other and greater intentions, and with them I most certainly agree. It is deeply necessary for the welfare of the Norwich that there should be this one supreme club specialising in Norwich Plainheads, and offering its protection and advantages to fanciers in the whole of the kingdom, and I venture to suggest that all Norwich fanciers worth their salt, even if they are members of another club and do not intend to join the N.P.C. cup competitions, should make themselves members, if only to show that they have the ultimate advancement of the breed at heart. I have seen many half-crowns spent in less worthy causes.

Richard Anderton.

Sir,—If "Sub Rosa" and all fanciers in the Midlands interested in starting a Norwich Plainhead Club will kindly send their names and addresses on to me, I will try and arrange a meeting as early as possible for the formation of the above club. Now, Midlanders, buck up, and let us have a specialist club of our own.

An Amateur Combine in the Eastern Counties.

Sir,—I send you a report taken from the "Eastern Evening News," and written by "J. E. N.," of a meeting held by the Norwich Amateur Society, which I attended as a delegate from the Lowestoft F.S. I think this interests several hundred breeders of Canaries in the Eastern Counties, and I thought perhaps you could find space for it in your valuable paper. I wish Cage Birds every success.

Fredk. Rackham.

Sec., L. and D. C.B.S.

Extracts from "J.E.N.'s" Remarks.

"The talked-of combination of the amateur section of Canary breeders of three or four counties has made an impression on my mind through the remarks of Mr. Fred Rackham, the secretary of the L. and D.C.B.S. His idea is that should his society desire the patronage of breeders of the counties of Norfolk, Suffolk, Cambridgeshire, and Essex, it would prove successful to all amateurs to be confined to them only. It would no doubt bring about a heavy entry of birds in whatever town the show was held if this arrangement could be carried out. To ask for the support of the Norwich amateurs, Mr. Rackham has met a small assembly of these breeders, and fully discussed the matter. Whether this gathering will have the desired effect remains to be seen. Those Norwich amateurs who desire to support the L. and D.C.B.S. show, would be greatly benefited not only in an exhibiting point of view, but also in the sale of their birds from the show bench. At the same time, this class of breeder should be protected from being made champions before their time. Scores of members of this section possess birds at the present time for breeding stock that would surprise many who have been connected with the industry for years, and yet their desire is not to be made champions if they should take upon themselves to exhibit birds at a show in a county adjoining their own. I would suggest that the executive of the Lowestoft society should include in their schedule as under:—The following six classes are open to the breeders of Norwich Canaries in Norfolk, Suffolk, Cambridgeshire, and Essex. Dealers in cage birds and champion exhibitors are not eligible to compete in the classes named: Any variety Norwich Plainhead yellow cock; A.V. buff cock. These two classes guaranteed by Mr. W. W. Frecstone. A.V. Norwich Plainhead yellow hen; A.V buff hen. These two classes guaranteed by Mr. Fred Rackham. A.V. Norwich Crest (cock or hen). This class guaranteed by Mr. H. E. Dunham. A.V. Crest-bred (cock or hen). The next thing wanted is half-a-dozen special prizes, not medals, but useful articles (one of which I shall be pleased to give providing the other specials are promised). Then the fixture would go with a swing, if properly advertised. A great difficulty appears to be as to what constitutes a dealer in Norwich Canaries. Well, that is a question that has been brought forward and talked of for years, and it is one of those questions that may be argued upon till Domesday. I take it that persons who advertise birds for sale not of their own breeding, come absolutely under the heading of merchants. They purchase for profit, and make known what they have for sale, to gain that profit. Many fanciers have been known to buy birds on commission only, authorised by a dealer, and have received reward for so doing, but they do not come under the heading. Some years ago a well-known bird merchant was greatly in want of Norwich Canaries, not in their hundreds, but in thousands, and many breeders who knew what birds should be, were commissioned to buy up all they could, the money being given them previous to their purchasing them. They set to work, and did well; but they also would not come under the heading of a dealer in birds."

Is Rain a Friend to Aviculturists?

Nesting Seasons in Africa.

Sir,—My attention has been called by a correspondent to a remark in one of the Rev. C. D. Farrar's recent articles which seems to have caused some doubt in my correspondent's mind as to the accuracy of a remark of my own which appeared some time since in your columns. The matter is not in the least important, but, as it raises a point of some interest to aviculturists, it may be worth while to say a few words about it. What I said was, if I recollect aright, one of the many curious ideas which prevailed in this country with regard to breeding foreign birds was that they and their young could not stand rain, although many tropical species reared their young in the midst of such rain as was never seen in this country. I see that what Mr. Farrar says is that "it is hopeless in this country to let Waxbills nest in growing bushes; you have to think of the weather. In Africa rain in the breeding season is practically unknown." I do not quite know what Mr. Farrar means by "the breeding season in Africa." In a vast Continent which extends more than 2,000 miles north and south of the Equator nesting is going on in every month of the year. In the extreme north the seasons (and nesting seasons) are much the same as those of Southern Europe, whereas in South Africa the winter is our summer; the summer our winter. As Mr. Farrar is writing about Waxbills, I expect he refers to South Africa, and he apparently is under the impression that Waxbills there nest in the dry season (the winter). If he will look into the matter, I think he will find that this is only exceptionally the case. Andersson tells us ("Birds of Damaraland") that "the pairing and breeding season of birds in Damara, Namaqua, and adjacent parts depends much, if not entirely, on the falling of the rains; that is, the season is late or early according to late or early rains. From November to May is the chief period of incubation, but very many birds pair as early as September." I expect that Mr. Farrar wrote rather hurriedly, because I know that he agrees with me that the vast majority of both seed-eating and insect eating species feed their young chiefly on insects, and the rainy season (or summer) in South Africa is the chief season for insects. Undoubtedly some species breed in the winter (for instance, the Red-headed Finch nests in June), in which case the young are probably fed on seeds chiefly, and some in both seasons (see Stark's remarks on the Violet-eared Waxbill); but the central fact remains that in South Africa the nesting season par excellence is the wet season. Rain accompanied by cold winds will, of course, kill nestlings, and I have no doubt that it would be difficult to rear young Waxbills in a cold county such as Yorkshire, but when Mr. Farrar says that they cannot be reared in the open "in this country," he must be speaking without reflection, because every year many broods are reared in many parts of the country under these conditions. Few counties can beat Devonshire in the matter of rain, yet in my own aviary Avadavats, Green Avadavats, and Zebra Waxbills used to breed year after year quite freely, and rear their young in bush-nests; and in the early days I had some fine broods of Cordon Bleus and Fire-finches, but I do not keep delicate species such as these latter now, because it seems to me hardly humane to import them with such a high mortality. My experience is that if one has two pairs of the same species, one nesting in the open and the other in a heated house, the former is far more likely to rear the young, and I also find that birds in an uncovered aviary, exposed to rain throughout the year, will frequently resume those natural colours which are rarely, if ever, resumed in a dry atmosphere, so ought not aviculturists to look upon rain as a friend rather than an enemy?

W. E. Teschemaker.

P.S.—I hear that Mr. Farrar is going out to Australia in search of Poe birds, and he is to be congratulated on possessing such energy; but may I suggest that the Poe is not found in Australia?

The Proposed Yorkshire Canary Club for Edinburgh.

Sir,—Might I be permitted a few lines in your valuable paper in answer to "Auld Reekie"? The Y.C.C. of Scotland should be pleased to see the Eastern Yorkshire fanciers coming to the front, but I doubt whether or not it would be wise to form another Yorkshire club in Scotland at the present time. As "Auld Reekie" will surely know, there is a Y.C.C. of Scotland, with their headquarters at Glasgow, and for the past four years they have done their utmost to promote the Yorkshire Fancy, and as far as I can see their labours are being rewarded more and more every year. If this be so, then would it not be better for Scotland and the Fancy if "Auld Reekie" and his numerous companions joined the existing Y.C.C. of Scotland and thereby improved its strength? Although I have only joined the ranks recently, I am sure if many new members from Edinburgh and district were to join, some of the meetings arranged by the Club might be held at Edinburgh. But this information might be got from the Secretary of the Y.C.C., Mr. Gibb. I therefore hope to see "Auld Reekie" coming forward and joining the Y.C.C. of Scotland.

St. Mungo.

I find "CAGE BIRDS" a splendid advertising medium. I advertised some Thrushes a fortnight ago, and they were sold on the same Friday night, and I had applications up to the next Friday night; in fact, there were so many I could not think of replying to all. I advertise something nearly every week.—Stanley Holt (Bacup).

Permit me to express my thanks to the numerous correspondents who wrote me as a result of seeing my small advert in "CAGE BIRDS." I advertised some birds for sale, or exchange musical instruments, enough of which were offered me to start an orchestra. I am only sorry I had not enough birds to supply all applicants, most of whom were eager to possess the birds, and I hope the disappointed will let me off for not replying to them, as I could not find time to answer everyone.—H. V. Boden (Andover).

Thus writes Wesley T. Page, F.Z.S., in "Nutshell" No. 19, "The Pekin Nightingale." He goes on to show how this charming bird can be managed and bred in captivity, giving full particulars as to its treatment at every stage of its existence; post free 2½d., from the Publisher, 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C.

NOTICE! To those about to buy a Grey Parrot. There are many points to look for when making your purchase, ways of telling at a glance in what state of health the bird is. Though it is difficult to distinguish sex, there are means. The Grey Parrot is a delicate bird, and the feeding of a newly imported specimen is therefore a matter of the utmost importance. Then, the Parrot acclimatised, care with its general diet is very needful; there are many foods which it will readily eat, but which must be rigidly avoided. With due care you can make a grand talker of a "Grey," and quickly, too, if you know how. What is a common mistake which Parrot lovers make? The answer to this question, and to every other concerning the keeping of this popular bird in health and condition will be found in "Nutshell" No. 17, "The Grey Parrot," by Wesley T. Page; post free 2½d., from the Publisher, 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C.

WAXBILLS. WAXBILLS.

Golden-breasted, Orange-cheeked, Grey and St. Helena Waxbills, favourites with foreign bird-keepers. One cannot fully describe the beauty of these little birds, which make a pretty spectacle disporting themselves in the aviary among the green plant life. They thrive best in an aviary, and this is easily and cheaply made if you follow the directions given by Wesley T. Page, in "Nutshell" No. 20, along with all the other hints necessary, if you would be successful in keeping and breeding these lively and vivacious pets; post free 2½d., from the Publisher, 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C.

WESLEY T. PAGE'S COLLECTION

of extremely valuable information about that most lovely of foreign seedeaters, the Gouldian Finch is offered to keepers of foreign birds in "Nutshell" No. 14, "Gouldian Finches." The red-faced and black-faced kinds are fully described, and full directions as to their keeping and feeding in captivity are given. Outdoor aviaries, indoor flights, and cages for Gouldians can be easily made at home by the aid of the particulars given by Wesley T. Page, who is an authority on foreign birds. The way food is offered counts for much. For how much, see "Nutshell" No. 14, 2½d., post free, from "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

CHEAP, CHARMING FOREIGNERS.

Such, in short, are Budgerigars, which are among the most beautiful and lively of man's feathered pets. The breeding of "Budgies" is a work of patience, but, owing to the possibilities in the production of varieties, it is very profitable. Difficulties there are in the way, many and serious, but they can be overcome. Food, and the construction of cage and aviary are very important items. Full particulars as to proper feeding, caging and management in captivity, with hints on sexing, breeding, moulting and exhibiting will be found in "Nutshell" No. 18, "The Budgerigar," post free 2½, from CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C.

A. A. A. A. A. A. A. A.

"A" comes first in the alphabet, and with those who keep foreign birds, Avadavats should come first, for their beauty, grace, vivacity, confiding demeanour and readiness to adapt themselves to the conditions of cage or aviary life, merit them this distinction. Learn all about them from "Nutshell" No. 16, "Avadavats." It's by Wesley T. Page, a specialist in foreign birds, 2½d. post free, from the Publisher, 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

of priceless information. Such is the matter in "Nutshells" 25 and 26, which cover the whole of the groundwork so far as softbills are concerned. There are certain materials indispensable for the proper keeping of the more delicate of the insectivorous birds. What those are, "Nutshell" No. 25 tells you, and afterwards goes very fully into a very important subject hand-rearing. The author, H. J. Fulljames, who is no "chicken" at the keeping of British birds, then describes all the favourite varieties in a delightfully clear and helpful manner, showing which best repay the care spent upon them. It is safe to say that everything that is anything is dealt with in one or the other of the booklets, and readers will not be long in picking up the hints. Notice! The breeding of meadworms is described and instructions as to the gathering of ants' eggs given. For the most complete instruction on British softbills, and the foods and appliances needful, if they are to be kept in perfect health, get "Nutshells" 25 and 26, post free, 5d. the two, from The Publisher, 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

so as to detect when any of your Rollers are going wrong. How can you detect anything wrong? You don't know? Well, you ought to, for your lack of knowledge will be disastrous to the singing powers of your birds. "Nutshell" No. 10 gives you this knowledge, and if you don't get it, it will be a case of "penny wise and pound foolish." Which bird promises to be good with hollow roll, bell-roll, bass-roll, and Koller? How do you cure a bird of noisiness? What are the best training methods and the best preparation for contest singing? For answers to these great questions in Roller Canarydom, and also full particulars as to correct keeping and breeding, get "Nutshell" No. 10, "The Roller Canary," 2½d. post free, from "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

Winning Yorkshires.

Having now selected my breeding stock I find I have a few more pairs Yorkshires than I can find room for. I have decided to offer them to the first comers at the above very low prices.

These birds have been bred by me from my winners (which have secured firsts and specials at all the leading championship shows in the country including Scottish National and Crystal Palace). They have been kept over with a view to breeding myself, and should produce youngsters able to hold their own in the best of company. This is a genuine opportunity for fanciers to introduce new blood (and that the finest in the country) into their bird rooms at a reasonable price. I have also a few grand lengthy birds at the following prices: Cocks, in full song, 6/-, 7/6, 8/6, 10/6, 12/6, 15/-, 20/- each. Grand racy hens feathered to perfection, at 3/-, 4/-, 5/-, 7/6, 8/6, 10/-, 12/6 each. Matched pairs, 8/6, 10/6, 12/6, 15/-, 17/6 per pair, in Clears, Ticks, Marked, or Greens.

Also a choice selection of Crests, Crest breds, Rollers, Mules, Siberian Goldfinches, etc., etc.

Every bird on approval. Satisfaction absolutely guaranteed. Easy payments arranged if desired.

to solve all the intricacies connected with the breeding and exhibiting of Yorkshires Canaries is now offered at 1/1 post free. "Yorkshire Canaries," by H. W. Battye, illustrated by H. Norman, and A. J. Simpson, is a notable work. It is replete with all that is needful for the beginner, and is extremely valuable to old hands. The chapter on the selection of stock is alone worth the money, and there are 14 other chapters equally rich in valuable hints. See those on Breeding Cinnamon Marks; Crossing; Dressing or Faking; Don'ts for Breeders. NOTICE! To those about to buy a Grey Parrot. There are many points to look for when making your purchase, ways of telling at a glance in what state of health the bird is. Though it is difficult to distinguish sex, there are many. The Grey Parrot is a delicate bird, and the feeding of a newly imported specimen is therefore a matter of the utmost importance. Then, the Parrot once acclimatised, care with its general diet is very needful; there are many foods which it will readily eat, but which must be rigidly avoided. With due care you can make a grand talker of a "Grey," and quickly, too, if you know how. What is a common mistake which Parrot lovers make? The answer to this question, and to every other concerning the keeping of this popular bird in health and condition will be found in "Nutshell" No. 17, "The Grey Parrot," by Wesley T. Page: post free 2½d., from the Publisher, 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C.

WAXBILLS. WAXBILLS.
Golden-breasted, Orange-cheeked, Grey and St. Helena Waxbills, favourites with foreign bird-keepers. One cannot fully describe the beauty of these little birds, which make a pretty spectacle disporting themselves in the aviary among the green plant life. They thrive best in an aviary, and this is easily and cheaply made if you follow the directions given by Wesley T. Page, in "Nutshell" No. 20, along with all the other hints necessary, if you would be successful in keeping and breeding these lively and vivacious pets; post free 2½d., from the Publisher, 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C.

WESLEY T. PAGE'S COLLECTION
of extremely valuable information about that most lovely of foreign seed-eaters, the Gouldian Finch is offered to keepers of foreign birds in "Nutshell" No. 11, "Gouldian Finches." The red-faced and black-faced kinds are fully described, and full directions as to their keeping and feeding in captivity are given. Outdoor aviaries, indoor flights, and cages for Gouldians can be easily made at home by the aid of the particulars given by Wesley T. Page, who is an authority on foreign birds. The way food is offered counts for much. For how much, see "Nutshell" No. 14, 2½d., post free, from "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

CHEAP, CHARMING FOREIGNERS.
Such, in short, are Budgerigars, which are among the most beautiful and lively of man's feathered pets. The breeding of "Budgies" is a work of patience, but, owing to the possibilities in the production of varieties, it is very profitable. Difficulties there are in the way, many and serious, but they can be overcome. Food, and the construction of cage and aviary are very important items. Full particulars as to proper feeding, caging and management in captivity, with hints on sexing, breeding, moulting and exhibiting will be found in "Nutshell" No. 18, "The Budgerigar," post free 2½, from CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C.

The Membership Roll.

Our membership roll again shows a substantial increase, as will be seen from the list which follows. It will be noticed that twelve of the new members are from Leicester. This is a sequel to the resolution reported in these columns on April 23, which was to the effect that the Leicester C.B.S. would pay half the subscription of its members to CAGE BIRDS LEAGUE. In sending along the list of Leicester members, the hon. sec., Mr. Groocock, writes: "Unfortunately, at our last, when more were expected to join, the weather was so adverse that scarcely any members attended. However, it is hoped that more will join at future meetings."

Mesdames Munday, Axminster; Weddell, Kingsland; Messrs. Clark, Bristol; Melling, Millom; Ridley, Black Hill; Brandist, Bedworth; Rowley, Lindfield; Collier, Pinner; Wilson, Filey; Telfer, Douglas; Johnson, Attercliffe; Bradley, Sheffield; Cumming, Lories; Campbell, Forres; Hawthorn, Yates, Teone, Davis, Smith, Bellamy, Cook, Silcock, Spencer, Worley, Gamble, and Groocock, Leicester; Dunford, Cowes; and Tansley, Deptford.

More Local Hon. Secs.

I have the pleasure of announcing two more additions, as below, to our list of Local Hon. Secs. Before the beginning of the show season we shall have in working order our system of granting for competition at shows gold, silver, and bronze medals, according to the number of members of the League belonging to any particular society. Our list of bird-shop keepers whose shops are open to inspection with a view of becoming entitled to our certificate, is getting larger and larger, and our coloured membership certificates are in course of preparation. I shall have more to say on all of these subjects in the near future, and I hope in the meantime I shall be able to register many Hon. Secs. for districts not yet represented. Societies intending to support CAGE BIRDS LEAGUE will do well to hurry up, in order that they may participate in our medals scheme. The allotting of these medals will be entirely in the hands of the respective committees. The number, or grade, of medals will, as stated above, also be virtually in the hands of societies, for the more of their members who are members of CAGE BIRDS LEAGUE the more value will be given in medals for competition at their annual show. Our latest Hon. Secs. are:—

West Ham and Stratford.—Mr. J. Little, 154, Abbey Road, West Ham, Stratford, E.

Oldham.—Mr. G. H. Wilkes, 31, Hamilton Street, Middleton Road, Chadderton, Oldham.

A Member's Thanks.

Three weeks ago I was enabled, by the courtesy of the Editor, to insert a paragraph in the "Twitterings" column calling attention to the loss sustained by a member of CAGE BIRDS LEAGUE in having his aviary broken into. This member, Mr. Drinkell, of 69, Tunnard Street, Grimsby, now writes as follows:—

"I write to thank you very much for publishing the Twittering in CAGE BIRDS, telling readers of my loss. It was the means of tracing the thieves. One of our readers in Grimsby told me about it first, and through him and the police I have been able to recover five of my birds. Only one cock Canary is among these, however, and my breeding season seems to have been quite broken up, as, being out of work, I don't see any chance of getting any more. I should be very thankful if any of our LEAGUE members or readers better off than myself could help me in any way, as I feel lost without my birds to look after."

Another Hun Atrocity on the War Path.

An extraordinary hotch-potch of extracts from various epistles and pamphlets has been raked together by a person signing himself, or herself, "Drew Birch," and appears to be going the round of the provincial papers, for I have received it many times in the shape of newspaper cuttings. Several members ask me to reply to the individual papers from which they have taken the cuttings, but the whole jumble of second-hand hysterics is so absurd as to need no refutation from me. Further, I have in these columns dealt with most of them long ago. The writer says: "Here in Great Britain it is legal not only to trap and sell birds, but also to inflict great cruelty upon them." Birds, after being caught, are "subjected to slow mental and physical torture till death rescues them. . . 80 per cent. die in a few days from sheer mental anguish and ill-fit eatment, the remaining 20 per cent. get solitary confinement for life. This is the most dreadful punishment that can be inflicted upon any living creature. . . . men choose death by hanging in preference to it. . . . Let any one look at these Skylarks, and Linnets and Thrushes, etc., and observe they spend all their time searching, but in vain, for lost liberty and an escape from their dreadful sentence—the living death, buried alive, but fed regularly to prevent an escape from it by death itself," and so on, ad nauseam.

I thank the members who have sent me the cuttings, and only wish that there were something in the letter which needed a reply. The characteristic which is common to all the effusions of the humanitarians is a lack of knowledge of the subject of which they treat. The letter referred to above has the further characteristic of lack of originality, for every paragraph in it is copied from previously published mis-statements and exaggerations. If the writer really has anything to say it would be better to say it rather than hash up as original matter the puerile gushings of those who have gone before.

A Steady Nest Pan Holder.
Sent by Mr. W. Danks, 14, Smith Terrace, Rutherglen.

I enclose a sketch of a nest pan holder which I find is much steadier than the wire ones commonly used as there is no vibrating with this when the birds fly off and on to the nest. The main piece (No. 2) is cut from a scrap bit of three-ply wood with a fret saw (a very handy tool for home cage-making). Lay an ordinary wire holder on the wood and run a pencil round the inside of the circle; then draw in the outer side (as in sketch). To cut out the centre part, bore a small hole and insert the saw blade, then cut round in the usual way. No. 1 is cut from a piece of scrap boxwood ¼in. thick. Make the hole A (before cutting) to take in a small screw nail, which fixes it to the cage back. Nail up through the three ply wood into the thickness of the back piece when putting the holder together. A coat of paint or enamel finishes it, and prevents any moisture soaking into the wood.—Wm. Danks.

No. 582.
A Useful Scraper.
Sent by Mr. W. G. Andrews, 1, Hayes Street, West Bromwich.

The following idea as to the making of a home-made scraper will, I trust, prove beneficial to brother fanciers. The cost is practically nil. The scraper is one that has every advantage. To make, procure a piece of 12-gauge zinc (4in. by 3in.), and cut off the corners as shown in "A." Turn down the edge three-quarters of an inch (as in "B"). Next procure what is known as a plasterer's lath (sawn); nail with spriggs and clinch the spriggs afterwards. You have then a very useful and strong scraper as shown as "C."—W. G. Andrews.

The Young Naturalist.

*A Mischievous Robin.

While we were in church at All Saints' this morning a Robin came in and flew round the church. It pitched on my friend's hat and pecked at a bunch of cherries she was wearing and made us all laugh. Then it flew out of the window.—From Emmie Guppy (aged 12), Clevedon, Somerset.

*The Clever Canary.

A lady had two pets—a Canary and a Bullfinch. Her little sister one day was startled from her play by hearing a cry of distress from the Canary. On going to see, she found him well enough, but greatly excited, and evidently pointing to the Bullfinch. On looking, she found the poor bird with his head stuck so far into his seed-box that he could not draw it back. She called her elder sister, and with a little difficulty set him free, though the poor thing was half dead with fright. But he recovered in time. Thus the Canary saved his friend's life.—Taken from "Girls' Own Annual, 1881," and sent by Benjamin Waudby, Wesley Farm, South Cave, East Yorks.

Good Mother Sparrow.

I think the following little story, taken from Volume I. of the "Zoological Journal," is proof of the Sparrow's love for its young:—"A pair of Sparrows, which had built in a thatch roof of a house at Poole, were observed to continue their regular visits to the nest long after the time when the young birds take flight. This unusual circumstance continued throughout the year, and in the winter a gentleman who had all along observed them determined on investigating the cause. He therefore mounted a ladder, and found that one of the young was detained a prisoner, by means of a piece of string or worsted, which had formed part of its nest, having become accidentally twisted round its leg. Being thus unable to procure its own food, it had been fed by the continued exertions of the parents."—Sent by Eva Dollin (aged 13), 16, Stuart Terrace, Stoke, Devonport.

Mr. Robinson proposed Mr. H. Watkin as a member; seconded by Mr. T. Dunn. We also held a very heated debate on the federation of the societies of North Staffordshire.—W. G. Llewellyn, Sec.

VALE OF LEVEN C.B.C.

Meeting held April 4th. President Hannah having introduced Mr. J. A. Adams (Glasgow), a very excellent lecture on Hardbills was enjoyed. Starting with the Goldfinch, Mr. Adams proceeded to Bullfinches, Linnets, Greenfinches, Siskins, Redpolls, Twites, Brambles, Yellowhammers, Hawfinches, etc. He explained how to deal with newly-caught birds; the various seeds and wild berries suitable for each; how to mount specimens intended for exhibition, and stage them when finished. He treated his subject in such a manner that several of the older fanciers present acknowledged it was the finest lecture on the subject they had ever heard. Numerous questions having been asked and answered, the chairman, in moving a vote of thanks referred to Mr. Adams' great popularity in the Vale Club, and as each visit made the club more attached to him he hoped it would not be long until he was amongst us again. Mr. Adams having replied amid great applause, the meeting adjourned until May 2nd.—A. H. McLean, Sec.

We have received a communication for our correspondence columns signed W. Bailey, and bearing the address, "Chariot Road, Hogan Highway," but a letter sent there has been returned to us through the post. If the writer wishes his communication to be published, he must forward us his correct address, or no notice can be taken of it.

Owing to the very low return of ballot papers, I am obliged to extend date for receiving same till April 15, and I sincerely trust members will take advantage of this and at least take sufficient interest in the existence of club as to see their way to appoint a committee of management for the current year, writes Mr. John Young, sec. of the Scottish Crested C.C.

The Bolton and Dist. C.B.S. have decided to hold two nest feather shows on June 22 and July 20 respectively, writes Mr. J. Gerrard, the sec. Messrs. J. and J. Hopkins have kindly consented to judge the former; judge for the other not yet elected. We are having a potato pie supper at headquarters, Joiners' Arms, Deansgate, April 17, at 7.30 p.m. A good array of talent has been arranged for, including Messrs. J. Quin and J. Dooley. It only requires a good attendance to make it a thorough success, and we invite fanciers and friends to come and see what we can do for the social side of the Fancy.

The opening article in the "Aviculiural Magazine" for April is an interesting account, by Mr. C. Barnby Smith, on the Display of the Tragopan Pheasant. Mr. P. T. L. Dodsworth continues his "Notes on the Wedge-tailed Green Pigeon in Confinement." This month's instalment of "Practical Bird-keeping" is by Mr. J. Lewis Bonhote. Other articles comprise "The Blue Thrush and Hangnest," by Mrs. Atherley; "Military Starlings," by Mrs. E. Warren Vernon; "Bird Notes from the Zoo," by the Curator; and the first portion of a "Diary of Birds seen on the White Nile," by Mr. R. Staples-Browne. In the correspondence columns Mr. J. Jeffery writes on the "Breeding of Nightingales."

We have received samples of "Ovatine," a food for the rearing of Canaries and other birds from the nest, prepared by that noted Scottish firm, Messrs. Dobbie and Co., Waverley Works, Leith, N.B. It is in four forms, Nos. 1 and 2, pure egg in powder and granules respectively; No. 3, pure egg combined with milk, in flake form; and No. 4, pure egg, milk, ground arrowroot, and sweet biscuit in combination. Nos. 1 and 2 are useful to fanciers requiring egg in these forms, and we venture to think that Nos. 3 and 4 deserve to be widely appreciated, as likely to be very reliable and time-saving in the breeding room. The combination of egg and milk seems to us to be particularly excellent—palatable and nutritious. All breeders of birds should certainly send to Messrs. Dobbie and Co. for samples (note advertisement in this issue).

Canary Visits a School.

The other day a Canary flew into the open window of one of the class-rooms at South Harringay Council School, London, N., much to the delight and amusement of the boys. The master in charge of the class caught the unexpected visitor, placed it in a cage, and (says the "Daily Sketch") awaited developments. The following day one of the boys noticed a reward of 3s. 6d. offered by the owner of a missing Canary, and the flyaway was restored to its home. By way of disposing of the reward, the master instituted a little competition among the boys' class and gave small prizes for the best work in the class.

An Enviable Record.

I was genuinely surprised to find that I had proved the winner of a guinea in the literary competition, writes Mr. E. C. Smith (Plymouth). It might interest you to know that it was only after reading your note that the essays were not coming in very fast that I decided to try, and sat down without notes and wrote a simple tale of the methods I had personally found to be the best in the management of Canaries during the breeding season. My methods have been formed or framed by Cage Birds, and it is there I have found a wealth of information from time to time. I have only lost one young bird of all hatched during the last two seasons, which I think is a wonderful result. I have never had a single bird with inflammation; the one bird lost had both legs broken (one of them in the thigh), and I put it out of pain. This year I am going to try my hand with Mules, as the reading of "Cage Bird Hybrids" has fired my ambition in that direction, and ultimately, as I gain experience with British, I shall have a try at Hybrids between them.

DEATH OF A NOTED BIRD ARTIST.

A brief notice of the regretted demise of Mr. J. G. Keulemans, a photograph of whom is here reproduced, appeared in our last issue. We learn that the deceased gentleman was seventy years of age, and had been ailing since December last. He had earned for himself a great name both as a naturalist and as an artist, his pictures of bird life bearing the impress of a master hand, being alike artistic and pleasing in conception and accurate in detail and colouring. He had worked for most of the leading ornithologists, including the Duchess of Bedford and the Hon. Walter Rothschild; also the Zoological Society and the British and South Kensington Museums. Mr. Keulemans was blessed with nineteen children, nine of whom survive him, and to these and to his widow our sincerest condolences are tendered. Mr. Keulemans was well known both in Paris and London, and his genial disposition and true Bohemian temperament endeared him to his many friends. Bird-lovers have suffered a great loss in his removal from our midst.

An Explanation.

Our attention has been drawn by Mr. W. R. Knowles, of Earlestown, Lancs., to a marked similarity between certain passages contained in the article on "How to Rear Canaries," by Mr. H. A. Waddington, of Earlestown, which appeared in our issue of March 16 last, and certain passages from a lecture on the rearing of young Canaries which he himself (Mr. Knowles) has several times delivered before various societies. We have compared the manuscript of Mr. Knowles's lecture with Mr. Waddington's article, and have come to the conclusion that it is due to Mr. Knowles that we should publish a paragraph to this effect; we may say, further, that the writer of the article complained of acknowledges his indebtedness to Mr. Knowles and other leading fanciers for the methods he follows, and has found successful, in the breeding of Canaries.

The Magpie's Amusements.

At one time a Magpie belonging to a neighbour used to pay frequent visits to my garden, says Mr. C. Reid in "Country Life." His favourite amusement seemed to be the picking up of articles, such as pieces of string. These he hid away in the most convenient crevices he could find in the garden furniture or elsewhere. Articles that he prized would be removed from one place to another, as fancy dictated, or perhaps for greater security. Like others of his tribe, he showed a preference for bright or shining articles. On his excursions one day he stole through an open window into one of our bedrooms. In a box of matches he found a new plaything. This was pounced upon, and its contents scattered all over the floor. A two-shilling piece that came his way elsewhere was carried off and deposited in a neighbour's garden. His feathered companions about this time were pigeons belonging to some boys. These he bullied and annoyed so much that, in order to prevent reprisals, he was deprived of his wonted liberty and condemned to undergo a period of solitary confinement. Another Magpie, belonging to a naturalist in the town, had the same habit of secreting things; but, unlike the bird referred to, he had an element of generosity in his mental equipment. When in confinement he occupied himself in stuffing his surplus food into the crannies of his dwelling. When at freedom he carried these morsels to a skating pond near by, and handed them over to a colony of Black-headed Gulls that congregated there in open weather. His owner was greatly amused and delighted.

Wild-Bird Life.

Recording the First Migrants.

As the days lengthen we once more get records from observers of the early arrival of some of our spring migrants. Of all the birds which come to us for the summer the Cuckoo, Swallow, and Nightingale are the most looked for, and the species that everybody is eager to make the first record of. Needless to say, many of these are erroneous, although one cannot deny that year after year a stray bird or so manages to get over here some time in advance of his fellows. Yet anxious as we are to see the first arrival, we should always remember that "one Swallow does not make a summer," and when the cold easterly wind is blowing we wonder how the solitary wanderer manages to survive his long journey and to find sufficient food to exist upon now he is here.

Our country is so varied in the matter of temperature (some districts being warmer and so very much more sheltered than others) that it is just possible for a whole flock of birds to be within a few miles of a keen observer, without his noting a single specimen. The writer lives in a district situated some four hundred feet above sea level, and although during the summer months nearly all our migrants are plentiful, yet the spring is well advanced before the Cuckoo, the Nightingale, and batches of Swallows and Martins put in an appearance; and he has frequently seen them in other more sheltered situations many days and even weeks before they take up their quarters in their old haunts. One is tempted to ask the questions: Do these birds spend some days in a sheltered place before coming to their breeding grounds; and are they later in arriving than others? Careful observations show us that in many cases wild birds journey direct to their old haunts, and one of the prettiest sights we have is the behaviour of a pair of Swallows upon their first arrival. The ceaseless twittering, the flying in and out the old building where last season's brood was reared, the noisy activity and excitement tell one as plainly as birds can how delighted they are once again to reach the old home and surroundings.

Rookeries in April.

April is a busy month in the Rookery, and one can always find plenty to watch and interest. The mother birds are upon the nest and their partners sitting quietly beside it, or returning with food from a foray in the neighbouring fields. Rooks' nests must feel the full force of a rough wind, yet season after season goes by without an accident, although to look at them one would think the first gale would dislodge the whole colony.

Poor Bullie!

In a paper on "The Food of Birds," read by Mr. W. E. Collinge before the Association of Economic Biologists at Dublin, on March 27, he said it does not necessarily follow that because a bird is insectivorous it is beneficial; indeed, there are many birds whose food consists of more beneficial insects than injurious ones. Graminivorous birds, generally speaking, are injurious. At first sight it might appear that birds feeding upon the seeds of weeds are beneficial, but the fact that obnoxious weeds are largely distributed by the agency of birds, and that such weeds are never completely eliminated by the action of birds, must be borne in mind. Birds that breed early in the year feed upon the first broods of various species of insects, thus affording a very important check, often, no doubt, preventing a plague. Mr. Collinge, from an examination of some hundreds of Bullfinches, extending over the whole of the year, and collected over a wide area, showed it to be a most injurious species and a distinct enemy to the fruit-grower.

The Fascination of an Aviary.

By G. E. RATTIGAN. (London, S.W.)

Readers of this charming contribution will agree that the possessor of an Aviary is a person to be envied. It is possible to erect and stock one at a very small cost, and the present is the best of all possible times to do so.

I AM really still quite a novice in the art of keeping birds, and it is therefore perhaps rather presumptuous of me to essay the task of writing an article on this subject. However, I trust that though I cannot hope to supply much, if any, new information, I may yet contrive at all events to interest some of CAGE BIRDS' readers with my avicultural experiences.

Mortifying Experiences.

I commenced just about four years ago with a large, very draughty, and badly constructed cage, which I proudly called an aviary (6ft. long by 4ft. by 6ft. high). In this I placed two pairs of Budgerigars, two pairs of Zebra Finches, two cock Saffron Finches, two cock Madagascar Weavers, one pair of Bullfinches, one pair of Goldfinches, a Red-crested Cardinal, one pair of Pope Cardinals, two cock Red-eared Bulbuls, and one pair of Cockatiels. The last-mentioned I had to get rid of, however, as in this small space they terrified the other birds, and the Bulbuls died through my ignorance as to how to feed them properly. At this time I did not know of the existence of such a splendid paper as CAGE BIRDS, with all its fund of information valuable to both the novice and the experienced aviculturist; if only I had I should not have suffered all the mortifying experiences of those first few months.

Fresh Quarters for the Birds.

In the autumn following the purchase of the cage I have described, I caused a conservatory to be built 24ft. by 10ft. by 10ft., and heated it with hot-water pipes by a stove placed outside the building. A space of 4ft. by 10ft. at the western end of the conservatory I had cut off from the aviary, and I use it as a store room. This is fitted up with shelves for storing food, nesting material, etc.; it is also used as a quarantine for freshly-purchased birds.

The aviary itself is divided down the centre by a wire partition, and the entrance to it is effected by means of two glass doors, one opening on each side of this partition. At the further end of the aviary two windows give access to an outdoor extension. The wire partition is continued through the middle of this extension, but a door is placed in it so that it can be converted into one aviary or two at will. The extension I use in the spring and early summer for breeding purposes, and is planted with privet and other hardy shrubs and bushes every winter.

The conservatory aviary is, I regret to say, not a very great success, and I only wish now that I had put up instead an ordinary wooden shelter with a much larger flight. This would not have cost me a quarter of what the conservatory did, and would, I feel sure, have given infinitely better results. However, I suppose one can only learn these things from experience, though this has been a pretty costly one for me. But if ever I have another aviary constructed you may be sure it will not be of the conservatory pattern.

When and How the Birds are Fed.

The aviary is furnished with all manner of nesting boxes, coco-nut husks, nesting logs, etc. The most useful in my experience are the coco-nuts, nesting logs (Budgerigars are very fond of these), and a box with a kind of gable top, which is very much patronised by Zebras and Saffron Finches; the top of this box takes off, so that one can, if one likes, see how matters are progressing, though care should, of course, be taken not to disturb the birds more than once in a way in this fashion; Saffrons especially desert or eat their eggs for the least thing.

The birds are fed only once a day. As they are of various species, both hard and soft billed, two kinds of soft food mixture, besides hard boiled egg, bread, or sponge cake, mixed with ants' eggs and two different seed mixtures (Trower's English and Foreign mixtures, with a little sunflower seed added) are supplied; also a quantity of fruit of various kinds, and some of this is sampled by all the birds, even the Finches and other hardbills, and I am sure is very good for them. I also supply mealworms every morning, and a few live flies as an extra treat every other day. Of the latter the birds are very fond indeed, and it is an interesting as well as an amusing sight to see the dexterous manner in which they catch these insects on the wing.

Quite a Star Performer.

Some birds are very much more expert than others, and show great ingenuity in capturing their prey. Quite the star performer, however, is a Hardwick's Bulbul. Sometimes, when a fly gets between the wire and the glass at the top of the aviary, it is really wonderful to see the way in which the bird clings to the wire and flutters his wings till he succeeds in frightening his quarry away from the glass, when with a rapid sweep he never fails to secure it. This bird will not look at mealworms, gentles, or, as far as I have been able to ascertain, any other insect, but flies he simply loves, and his excitement when he sees one in the morning is simply tremendous. He flies about from perch to perch, and keeps peering through the glass into the store room to see what I am up to, and if he thinks he is being kept waiting too long he becomes very angry indeed, and utters a sharp, rather metallic and angry sounding cry, which he keeps up incessantly until his wants are attended to.

After the flies have been apparently all devoured, he will still search in all sorts of likely and unlikely places on the chance of finding a stray one; and if, as is usually the case, he proves successful in his search, his joy is something which must be seen to be properly appreciated.

This Bulbul is quite the monarch of all he surveys on his, the larger birds', side of the aviary (I keep the small birds on one side and the larger ones on the other); and he has his own ideas on etiquette and the keeping up of that respect which he considers due to his kingly dignity. For example, no bird is allowed on any of the three perches which are placed near the door leading to the store room. These he regards as his absolute property, and woe betide any bird, however large, whether Cockatiel or Rosy Pastor, which ventures to alight upon any of them.

In Splendid Isolation.

Here he passes the greater part of the day in splendid isolation. Even when feeding in another part of the aviary, he keeps a watchful eye on his territory, and hurries back with indignant wrath to avenge the insult if any other bird has the temerity to trespass in his absence. In addition to this he has his own special food tin. His fury if he catches any other bird feeding out of this is beyond description, and he pursues the sinner fiercely, often for as long as ten minutes; and even after this pursuit is over he continues to chatter angrily to himself for some time before finally settling down again.

One especially bad offender in this respect is a Scarlet Tanager, and I often think he does it out of a sheer spirit of mischief, relying on his wonderful powers of aerial acrobatics to avoid punishment, and leading the indignant Bulbul a regular "will o' the wisp" chase, always just out of reach, up and down and all round the aviary.

This same Tanager, by the way, is the most extraordinary catch that I have ever seen, and would, for this talent make a valuable addition to any team setting forth to "bring back the ashes." A mealworm flung high into the air, or low down, straight at him or past him, he hardly ever fails to secure.

An Admirer of the Shama.

Another bird worthy of special notice is my Shama. A more intelligent looking bird it would, I think, be difficult to discover. There is a wealth of expression in his eyes, which, somehow or other, reminds me more of a dog's than of a bird's, and his actions certainly do not belie his looks. He is, in fact, a very intelligent creature, and knows exactly when and when not to be on the lookout for a mealworm or other special tit-bit. Often, for instance, early on a fine morning, he is out for a "constitutional" in the extension part of the aviary (which I have already described), access to which in winter is afforded by a small square door cut in the wall on the floor of the aviary. This door was really made originally for the convenience of Quail and other ground birds, but in the winter, to keep the place warmer, I have the windows closed. The little door, however, is always kept open, and is used by all the birds.

To return to my story, the Shama, on these occasions, no sooner perceives me coming towards the aviary than he is all attention, but he does not actually make a move until he is sure that I am going to enter the aviary, which, if I am late, I sometimes do not do until after breakfast, contenting myself instead with a casual look around to satisfy myself that all is well.

Once the morning allowance of mealworms has been doled out, however, I can go in and out of the aviary a dozen times without his taking the least notice; unless I happen to call or whistle to him, when he comes in at once.

By E. C. SMITH (Plymouth).

WE have left the question of cleaning until late, but this point must not be overlooked. Where a pair of birds are kept in an 18 or 20 inch breeder this should be carried out twice a week, fresh gritty sand supplied, and the perches washed at least once a week. If this is done quietly, yet quickly, the birds will take no notice of you; and if your sand drawer fits properly there will be no jarring or other cause to make the hen leave the nest. Clean grit and cuttlefish, with some old mortar, if obtainable, are essential articles for your birds' welfare.

When the young leave the nest they should, if in a single breeder, be transferred to the nursery cage hung on front of the breeder, the door of which should be raised so that the old birds can feed the young through one set of wires only. They will not need food or water for the next day or two, but when 23 or 24 days old they will begin to pick up for themselves. Their pan should be filled with egg-food, a little crushed canary and rape scattered on the floor of the cage, and a seed box put on with crushed seed. Then in two or three days' time they will find it and begin to help themselves a little. When they are 26 days old hang on water also, and when they are a month old transfer them to a stock cage of fairly roomy dimensions, and give the egg-food three times daily with soaked seeds in separate pan and crushed seeds in hopper. At the end of a week begin to mix whole canary and rape with the crushed, and a little whole dry canary and maw with the soaked seed; but continue to soak the hemp for them. Gradually reduce the egg-food until the birds are eight weeks old, when it can be withdrawn altogether, if desired.

Keep the young now to canary and rape, and for green food give shepherd's purse or plantain in their green state, and occasionally a feed of soaked seed or cracked hemp, but no egg-food until moulting time, as the birds will be more hardy and less susceptible to the ills incidental to Canaries. Give the bath freely. Water should be given directly they are "on their own." Stomach troubles are more likely to result from lack of water than from an excess of it.

The old birds will have gone to nest again probably before the young are out of the nursery, having been supplied with a clean nestpan, etc., when the young were removed. One must follow the routine previously mentioned. Take two or three nests only from each pair in a season, which should end in July or beginning of August at latest. When the pairs are broken up the hens can be put into a flight, where they will get plenty of exercise, and should be fed plainly. Let them have plenty of green food (except dandelion) of all varieties, now very plentiful.

The Seed should be of the Best.

The seeds should be of the best. Canary: large, well ripened, full seeds, free from dust and dirt. Summer rape: reddish brown, with sweet nutty flavour when cracked between the teeth, free from mouldiness or tiny mites. Niger: coal black and shiny; the dull dingy black is mostly stale and rancid, and unfit for use. This is a valuable seed, for the hens especially. Maw: pale blue, a very fine seed, as a conditioner, or in cases of loss of appetite and looseness of the bowels. Hemp: The small hemp, I find, is usually the best, being fuller in the kernel (this is a seed that wants careful watching) and unless the kernel is full, white (not brownish) and sweet to taste, reject it; if one cannot get perfectly sound hemp it is better to do without it altogether, substituting a little sunflower seed crushed or chopped, or even soaked till bursting). Teazle seed: more of this seed would be used if fanciers only realised its value as a tonic, one very rarely finds any teazle left when it is given to the bird; it is a seed of which they soon get very fond.

Green foods are comprised chiefly of groundsel, chickweed, watercress, lettuce, shepherd's purse, plaintains, and dandelion, the last-named being most useful as a "forcing agent" in preparing birds for breeding; it is not generally liked for feeding young in the nest. Change the green food as often as it is possible, and don't keep the birds to one sort only; or two at most.

A Useful Nesting Tip.

I have noted that most breeders stick the lining of the nest pan in with paste. I would recommend its being pressed into the pan dry, and a button sewn on the outside of the pan, the needle passing through hole in bottom of pan, through lining and down again—just like sewing a button on to cloth. This will hold the lining firmly, and it can be pulled away. This will hold the lining firmly, and it can be pulled away from pan and plenty of insect powder dusted into the lining and between lining and pan. If this is done when the pan is first given to the hen, and again when she is set, the red mite will have no earthly chance of establishing themselves.

Let regularity in feeding and cleanliness as to cages, and all utensils be your strong points, and the young will "rear themselves," as it were. Let cock and hen rear the young together; it puts less strain on them and the young are better fed; consequently they are sooner out of nest.

Don't let cuttlefish bone ever be absent from your cages. Don't keep worrying the hen off the nest to see how the young are getting on. Don't forget to obtain "Canary Breeding for Beginners" when taking up our hobby. Get "Our Canaries," too; even the old hands can learn from it. CAGE BIRDS, of course, will come along every Friday. With their aid you will soon learn to surmount any trifling difficulties that may arise.

Questions and Answers.

DOUBTS AND DIFFICULTIES SOLVED BY SPECIALISTS.

(For Rules, see last week's "Cage Birds.")

THE following gentlemen represent CAGE BIRDS staff of ADVISORY EXPERTS. Queries must in no case be addressed to any of them individually, but to the Editor.

Canaries.—Claude St. John. British Birds, Mule and Hybrids—G. E. Weston. Foreign Birds—Wesley T. Page, F.Z.S., A.B.N.H.S., &c., Wild Bird Laws—H. Norman.

NOTE.—If an answer is required concerning the proper mating, etc., of Norwich, Yorkshires, Crests, Cinnamons, Greens, Borders, Lizards, Scotch or any other variety of the Canary family, we shall, should the querist desire us to do so, be pleased to submit his questions for answer to some leading specialist of the day on the variety concerned.

CANARY QUERIES.

Answered by CLAUDE ST. JOHN.

OUT OF CONDITION (B.N.).—Follow same advice as given to "F.W." for a fortnight, and if not then well, write again, and say what progress is made.

CANARY SEED (G.F.N.).—The sample of canary seed sent is of first-rate quality throughout—A1. I do not think it can be dear at 1s. 6d. per gall., though I am but a poor judge of prices by measure, always buying by weight myself. Still, such a seed can scarcely be really dear at any price.

WHEEZES AT NIGHT (Novice).—Your query seems to refer to a previous reply, to which you should have given a reference, as I cannot lay my hands on it. If my surmise is correct, go on with the treatment advised before; otherwise, give 20 drops of whiskey, five each of oxymel of squills and spearmint, wine, and two of eucalyptus oil well shaken together in one water, two days in every three, for a week or fortnight, as may seem necessary.

MOTHER AND SON (F.W.).—See that both these birds are kept in a bright, equal, and healthy position, free from draughts and damp. Also examine cages closely to see if red mites are troublesome, and if so deal with them as you will find advised in an article, which is now appearing. Then treat both for a fortnight the same as advised to "Trouble," except that you should give the rhubarb aperient every second day for the first week. At the end of the fortnight write again and report progress.

TWO SEED SAMPLES (P. Allen).—The dark reddish-brown seed is one the bird rape, but is a fat mustardy sort that I only advise for use in a seed mixture intended for occasional use. It is of rather poor quality. The whitish flat seed is of the same nature, and served the same purpose as sesame. I am not aware of it being sold separately by any particular name in this country. In India it is sold as white gingelly, our ordinary sesame being sold as red or black gingelly. It is useful in a seed mixture for preparing birds for breeding. No bird should be fed wholly on these seeds.

SHELLS SEED (Troubled).—Give a staple diet of plain canary only. Every second day give separately half a teaspoonful of summer rape and just a few grains of hemp, and on the alternate days a piece of bread and milk the size of a hazel nut lightly sprinkled with soft sugar, and also a pinch of maw. Give a crisp young leaf of dandelion daily. In the drinking water give six drops of syrup of rhubarb and as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence daily for three days, and afterwards four drops each of tincture of gentian, tincture of calumba, and aromatic sulphuric acid every second day for a week or ten days. A fortnight of this treatment should set matters right.

WILD SEEDS (J.B.S.).—The two thistles are nicely cleaned, and appear in very fair condition, so that I see no reason why you should not sell your surplus. An advert. in our columns would doubtless soon clear you out of it. It is very good for, and much relished by, nearly all the Finch tribe, including canaries, and makes a valuable item in a mixture for occasional use. The maggot is a larvæ that lives and feeds in thistles frequently. This maggot is also greatly relished by the birds, to whom it is most beneficial. If you split open a seed head and put in the cages the birds will see to it that none of these larvæ get far away. If the heads are picked whilst in bloom the seed would be "light," having very little kernel, and consequently comparatively worthless. The best time to gather is after a dry sunny day or two, when the copper-like downy part of head is on the point of beginning to sail away. I do not know what the mixed seeds consist of. It is probably a mixture of wild and cultivated plants, among which I recognise the common ordinary parsley, but am not botanist enough to discriminate between all. Gather dandelion heads as they ripen all through the spring and summer. Pluck them as soon as the pappus shows signs of flying. There will be a crop nearly practically every fine dry day. Gather sheltered parts as soon as the lower pods on the stem begin to burst open, and keep them in paper bags while the rest of the pods are ripening.

ROLLER AND CREST (Creste).—(1) It is not very unusual for a young hen to break the sequence in laying a clutch of eggs. She will probably finish with them and commence sitting by the 10th, when she should be given the fresh eggs to replace those broken and rise. If you did not do this the eggs will be useless, in all probability, owing to decomposition. You will find it very risky to do this when the nest is already occupied by fully developed young. (2) Dose with two drops of cod liver oil and malt every second day, and feed on the alternate days on a paste made of equal parts hemp meal, black rape and bread. Give a leaf of the dandelion daily. In the drinking water add six drops of tincture of gentian and four of tincture of calumba every second day.

THREE IN ONE (W. E. C.).—As your albino Roller cock has been feeding exclusively on soft food for a month, you need not trouble at all about his inability to crack hemp. Perhaps it would be better for him. Some quantities of hemp are very dry and may be found the poor bird's throat. Soak the hemp in water for a few hours before feeding it to him.

ROLLER COCK ILL (O.S.M.).—In addition to the staple diet of plain Canary give a morsel of bread and milk the size of a hazel nut, with two drops of cod liver oil emulsion on it, and liberally sprinkled with maw. Every second day give also a morsel of banana, but withhold all other kinds of fruit and green food until bird is recovered. Give one drop of a mixture of equal parts castor oil and brandy direct in the beak morning and night for two days, and afterwards six drops of tincture of gentian and four of tincture of calumba in the water every second day for a fortnight.

BROODY HEN WHEEZING (F.E.R.).—The hen may probably have got a chill, perhaps from vigorous bathing during the snap of chilly weather, though it is not very uncommon for a slight wheezing to occur at this time without any such cause. Withhold the bath during incubation, unless the weather gets very warm and the wheezing has disappeared, when you may offer it during the last two days of incubation with advantage. Also withhold green food during time of sitting. Give a staple of three parts canary to one part summer rape, and every second day for a week give a small teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with four drops of sherry and two of cod liver oil emulsion mixed in it and sprinkled with maw. On the alternating days during the same period add five drops each of glycerine, oxymel of squills, and spearmint wine to the drinking water.

DOES NOTHING BUT EAT (Perplexed).—You are treating the bird quite wrong. If it will do nothing but gorge upon hemp then cut hemp entirely out of its dietary. You need not fear it starving. Keep it in a cosy place, not overheated, but equable, and quite free from draughts. Give a staple diet of plain canary only. Every second day give half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with four drops of sherry and two of cod liver oil emulsion mixed in it, and sprinkled with maw, and also give two leaves of dandelion on these days. On the alternate days give a similar quantity of a mixture of summer and black rape and millet. In the drinking water give six drops of syrup of rhubarb and as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence every second day for a week, and afterwards four drops each of tincture of gentian, tincture of calumba, and dilute sulphuric acid every second day for a week. Let it bathe, in nice bright weather, three times a week. Feed and treat strictly on these lines for three or four weeks.

EGG BREAD (W. W. Despard).—A very good egg-bread is made as follows: Separate yolks and whites of four eggs. Whip yolks well, adding gradually four ounces castor sugar, then whip the whites of the eggs and blend with the yolks and sugar. Mix in four ounces of flour, stirring it well, and adding a few drops of milk, or butter-milk, if more moisture is required to make a dough. Bake in a well greased shallow tin in a moderately hot oven, and keep for several days to mature to a crumbly, consistency before use. Better get the presiding genius of the culinary department to carry out the bake. Other recipes will be found in the pages of "Our Canaries," also sundry articles on egg-food.

LOSING FEATHERS (Bore).—As you appear satisfied the bird is exposed to no draughts you should see that she is also free from great and rapid fluctuations of temperature and from damp. Keep in a fairly equable temperature, which need not be heated in any way now. Give a staple diet of three parts canary to one part summer rape mixed together. Every second day give a half teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with four drops of sherry and two of cod liver oil emulsion well mixed in it and sprinkled with maw seed. On the alternate days give a similar quantity of a mixture of equal parts hemp, millet, black rape and teazle. Give a leaf of dandelion daily, and allow bird to bathe three or four times a week in nice mild weather. In the drinking water add six drops of syrup of rhubarb, and as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence for two days, and afterwards give six drops of tincture of gentian and four of tincture of steel two days in every three for a fortnight, or you might stop the latter sooner if the feathers have quite ceased dropping.

The intervention of the Easter Holidays makes it impossible for us to get all the Queries received answered in time for publication in this issue. They will be dealt with, however, next week.—Editor.

Answered by G. E. WESTON.

GOLDFINCH NOT SINGING (Le Monde Aviole).—It sounds like a very unusual case. Are you quite sure the Goldie is in the perfect health you speak of? Take him away from the Linnets (in a room by himself) for a week, and see if this brings about a change. It may be "jealousy."

ABOUT THE HAWFINCH (Mick).—(1) There is a very similar difference between cock and hen Hawfinch as there is between cock and hen Chaffinch. The hen lacks the bright, glossy colours of the male—the warm browns and reds—and her bib is not so dense or (usually) so large. CAGE BIRDS some time ago issued a coloured plate depicting the cock and hen Hawfinch. (2) I expect your bird will eat the sunflower and hemp seeds out of the mixture you name, and waste the rest. Sunflower is the seed this bird prefers, hemp coming next. You will find, as you surmise, full details given in the Hardbill section of the "British Bird Manual"; a very good and valuable book. (3) If you want the bird for exhibition, by all means colour-feed it at the moulting season.

THE SAD CASE OF A GOLDIE (C.S.).—I am afraid that only too many fanciers are troubled with Goldfinches which fail to "properly do their duty," as you put it, in the breeding cage. There is no dependable remedy in the case of a bird like yours, and probably you would save yourself further clear eggs if you discarded him and tried another Finch. Should you be using a two-compartment breeding cage, shut him by himself during the night, and also during the day, except for an hour or so at early morning and at evening, when draw the slide and let him run with his mate. I think it is best to try a Finch of his disposition in a pretty big cage.

TWO ITEMS (Goldfinch, T.W.).—(1) I think you can try this Goldie with some confidence. Blow away the feathers from the lower part of the abdomen and examine his vent; if very prominent (well "sprung," as fanciers term it), then you can be sure that he is in full breeding condition. Canary fanciers always adopt this means of ascertaining whether their cock birds are in breeding form; it is an infallible guide, providing the bird is at the moment in a sound state of health. (2) You certainly ought not to have left the Linnet with the hen Canary while he "about stripped her." You ought to have parted them (it is in such a case as this where the double breeder comes in so very handily) until the hen began to build a nest, when he in all probability would not have molested her. This behaviour is generally the result of a "rank" male bird being put with a hen who is not up to concert pitch as regards breeding, and fails to respond to the overtures of her mate; the latter feels sore about it, and proceeds to make his displeasure known to her. If the Linnet is persistently badly behaved—that is, after the hen wants to nest—let him run with her for a short time morning and evening only until she is ready to incubate (has laid her third egg).

DEATH OF LINNET (Kay).—You write: "One morning its feathers were ruffled up, so at once put some Epsom salts in its water, but bird dead before night." How you imagine it possible for anyone to tell you the cause of death from this statement (plus two seed samples) I really cannot understand. The single symptom you describe (the feathers ruffled up) would be present in almost every disease birds suffer. Whatever the trouble, the speedy termination points to its being something uncommonly deadly in its concluding stages. As you have suffered other losses, it looks as though you have a contagious disease at work amongst your stock (I do not necessarily mean "fever"), and your most sensible plan would be to send a body to our Mr. Yates for expert post-mortem examination. He would tell you the exact cause of death, and then you could take steps to combat the trouble. With regard to the seed samples, No. 1 is not a mixture I should use myself as a regular thing for Linnets (it contains hemp and sesame), but the seeds of which it is composed seem of excellent quality; No. 2 is a wild-seed mixture of the "rough and ready" order, containing a large percentage of what is purely waste matter, but there is nothing about it to lead me to think it could harm birds, if used in moderation in the case of birds in small cages (most of the wild rapes, of which such mixtures are largely composed, are not easy of digestion, consequently are more suited to aviary birds—i.e., birds having ample opportunity of taking exercise).

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by WESLEY T. PAGE, F.Z.S., Etc.

AILING BUDGERIGAR (C.H.).—Separate this bird at once from its mate; the latter should have a clean cage, and the ailing bird left in the present one. When the ailing bird recovers, return him to his mate, and well scald out and disinfect the cage he has been occupying. Keep him in an even temperature, and out of draught. Every other day his drinking water should consist of one part Dinneford's Magnesia and two parts water. As soon as the voidings become watery, only give the mixture once a week. On other days give Bemax phosphate to drinking water in proportions as the maker say. Give grading (flowering grass) liberally, but it must not be tainted with frost. Keep a millet spray in the cage continually, also keep a small tin of crushed oats in the cage as well as the usual seeds. Please report progress a fortnight hence with as full details as possible, and describe where and how it is being and has been kept. Do not attempt at any time to make an ailing bird.

WHAT PARROT? (J. Baker). It is the Australian Rosecate (Rose-breasted) Cockatoo. It is a hardy species, and reputed to be a good talker in its native country, but most of those imported to this country do not accomplish much in this direction. Diet: Seed mixture (see reply to another correspondent last week), ripe fruit, nuts, plain biscuits, cuttlebone, and water. Do not give table scraps, tea, coffee, or milk sops, or any kind of animal food whatever. It is hardy and needs no coddling, but must not be subjected to draughts.

BUDGERIGARS AND LOVEBIRDS (G.Y.).—Yes, providing the cage is large enough, but a bare query like this is very misleading; you had better repeat query on this one point and send me size and description of cage, and then I can tell you what you can do with it. The Blue-wing and Lavender-heads are both about the size of Budgerigars, but have stouter bodies and short tails. The Budgerigars, as you will be aware, use no nesting materials, but you must either supply strips of bark and leaves, or supply living branches (this is best) for the birds to strip and line their nest boxes or logs with.

GREEN SINGING FINCHES (Greenbill).—Take out the division and let them fly together, but keep them under observation to see how they agree at first, and if they should quarrel put in a wire partition and keep it there, till such times as you see them feeding each other through the wire; it will then be safe to leave them together. Fix up, say, a Hartz travelling cage at one end of the cage, supply nesting material (same as for Canaries), and leave them to take their own course. In addition to your present diet, supply greenfood ad lib—seeding grass, chickweed, lettuce, groundsel, etc.—but it must not be tainted with frost. About three days before hatching is due (incubation lasts 13 or 14 days), supply a little of some good soft food mixture, and as soon as feeding begins, steamed ants' "eggs," live ants' eggs, and any other small live insects or their maggots you can capture, but do not pry into the birds' nesting arrangements.

ROSELLA PARRAKEETS (Bull and Bush).—(1) A seed mixture of one quart each canary and white millet, half a pint each of oats, hemp, and sunflower seed, and a gill of grit (not sand)—well mix, and it is ready to supply to the birds. Also supply ripe fruit and greenfood. (2) As a rule the hen has a small patch of green on the nape, and she is slightly less vivid than the male in colour, and the red on her head a little less extensive. (3) They have frequently been bred in outdoor aviaries in this country, and yours should do so as soon as they are fully adult. Hang up a barrel for them, or a nest-box with concave bottom. It is best to put up two, one in the aviary shelter and one in the open flight. The barrels are usually waterproof and need no cover.

ROSE-BREASTED COCKATOO (Mrs. Marshland).—There is no accounting for the habits some Parrots and Cockatoos form, but your bird, I should say, has either inflammation or rheumatism. Next time you see its feet bleeding paint them with Friar's Balsam, but look out for nips, as it will sting a bit when first applied. When there are no open sores I should paint these parts with bitter aloes, but they must be bathed frequently in warm water, say every other day, and the bitter aloes put on fresh after the bathing, as soon as the legs and feet are partially dry. Every other day, so long as the voidings are not too loose, put one teaspoonful of Dinneford's Magnesia into the daily supply of drinking water. Confine diet to seed mixture, plain biscuit, nuts, ripe fruit, and green food, with cuttlebone and grit. As soon as the habit of biting the feet is checked, in lieu of the bitter aloes, paint feet with neat whiskey after bathing, but if the bird commences the biting again, apply the Friar's Balsam, and as soon as the sores are healed, bathe and paint with bitter aloes again as required. These habits are very troublesome to check; you must persevere as directed above. Report progress a fortnight hence.

POST MORTEMS.

Mr. G. Yates, M.R.C.V.S., 2, College Road, Harrow, Middlesex, will examine and report upon dead cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for reply direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis, 21s. Subjects for post mortem examination must be sent packed in a box direct to Mr. Yates, with the fee, this and any accompanying letter being kept from contact with the dead bird. Send by letter-post; it is cheaper and quicker than parcel post. Any bodies sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

M. W.—Both birds died from same cause, viz., pneumonia, induced by cold. I should, however, take the precaution to cleanse and disinfect cage. Your experience is unusual, but you need feel no great cause for alarm.

A. SHEPPARD.—Septic fever.

CLAPHAM AND DIST. C.B.S.

Lecture by Mr. Hobbs on the Art of Colour-feeding.

Meeting held headquarters, April 1. The business included an item of much importance, viz., the election of a successor to Mr. A. L. Priest, who, to the regret of all, had to vacate the office owing to pressure of business. Mr. Priest has had a most successful run of office, and his successor will have a hard task to beat his record. His successor was found in Mr. Geo. Gee (of 58, Caldervell Road, Clapham Park, S.W.), a keen and up-to-date fancier, and the committee hope and believe the club will maintain its position. Medals were selected for competition amongst members at the forthcoming show, and a hand-some gold-mounted silver medal, as presented by an anonymous donor for best Goldfinch shown by a member at open show. At the next meeting on May 6, a washing competition is to take place, either British or Canary, any eligible. The bird may be entered on the evening of competition.—Mr. A. C. Askew, judge.

An interesting paper was read by Mr. Hobbs (Chairman), entitled "The Rise of the Colour-fed Bird." He said the art of colour-feeding was practically unknown until the year 1871, and when in those days from time to time a richly colored bird was staged, it was looked upon as a "freak" in the same way as the "all white" canary of the present day. It was an undisputed fact amongst the original breeders that the colour was due to the blood, and in the early stage of the growth of the feather they were merely tiny tubes. Anything "yellow" that the bird would eat was given it, and it became no longer a secret that certain foods would affect the colour, but each breeder closely guarded his mode of producing the high colour. The chief feeds were in those days marigold flowers, saffron solution, cochineal, port wine, beet root, and mustard seed. Towards the end of the year 1871, rumours became current that some wonderful coloured birds hailed from the Sutton-in-Ashfield district, and it was openly stated that the colour was due to some form of feeding. Although the best known tests of that date were applied, the colour could not be proved to be due to outward application. The birds were looked upon as "faked," but the fancier of Sutton-in-Ashfield kept his own council. A variegated buff was exhibited in that year at Cheltenham; a team of six hailed from the same quarter, and were recorded as winners. At the Crystal Palace show of 1872, a high coloured bird was passed as "dangerous," but one obtained a vhc. In 1873 a well-known Derby fancier brought out two highly coloured birds, and stated that they had been moulted in his own house, and the colour was due to their diet. The climax came at the Great Norwich Show of 1873, held at St. Andrew's Hall, a joint protest being made against a consignment of these birds which had secured all the prizes of note. It was, however, clearly established by analysis that no artificial colour had been used, and their reputation was at once established. Shortly afterwards the secret began to ooze out, and some fanciers boasted that they had made as much as £50 over it. The fancier (Mr. Bemrose) subsequently published the fact that the wonderful colour was entirely due to cayenne pepper. People were astounded. The secret could not have been so long held in the present day, for the doings of the Fancy are chronicled every week, and it would be impossible for intelligent men to grope in the dark as did our brother fanciers in the "Seventies."—S. A. Sandy.

Full details of Y.B. show on July 10th were arranged; same classification as last year, and society will add £1 to the prize-money. Mr. J. Brooker has kindly promised to judge. Breeding reports were eagerly discussed by members, one member making the interesting announcement that he had a pair of Gouldian Finches nesting in a cage indoors; we hope he will be successful. The hon. sec. would like to hear of a few more fanciers in this district wishing to join. All information gladly on application. The new silver cups will be on view at Clifford Bros., Kings road, for two weeks.—W. H. Pyke, Hon. Sec.

Edmonds. New rule cards were issued. Judges elected for 24th open show, Nov. 27th and 28th: Messrs. J. H. Payne (for cage birds). Clem Watson, A. Leith, C. Higham, and W. C. C. Dibble, with Mr. J. Penketh to pen and feed exhibits. Mr. A. J. Parker kindly promised a valuable medal for the best young cage bird. Mr. J. Bennett read a most interesting paper, and a discussion followed. Next meeting April 24th, same place, when Mr. A. Ireland will read a paper. We shall be pleased to see friends and shall be only too pleased to propose them as members.—W. J. Moran, Hon. Sec.

EDINBURGH N.C. AND M.B.S.

Meeting held Rooms, 142, High-street, April 6th. In the absence of the president, Mr. Charlton presided. There was a large attendance considering the stormy weather. Agreed to hold a V.B. show July 6th from 2 till 5 p.m., and if possible to have same in Buccleuch Parish Church Halls. Members please note, as the classification will be given out to all present at the May meeting, when final arrangements will be made. This society has nearly forty members, and will admit any fancier who resides within 12 miles from Edinburgh at meeting May 2nd, but not later. The following judges are to place the awards at our annual show on November 15th: Norwich, Mr. W. Grewar (Lochgelly, late of Forfar); Border Fancy, Mr. D. Hamilton (Hamilton); Mules British, and Foreign, Mr. J. F. Dewar (Edinburgh). I would again remind members and friends of the ramble on the afternoon of May 11th to Musselburgh. Train leaves Waverley Station at 2.40, when Mr. Sykes will meet the party and conduct them through the estate. This should prove interesting to all, as Mr. Sykes is an expert on British birds and their haunts. Mr. Napier (Junior Green) was admitted a member, and Mr. W. Rizzi was proposed and accepted. Intending members write for all information to me.—J. Welsh, Sec., 67, Roebuck-place.

ARDWICK (and Manchester District) C.B.A.

General meeting held April 2nd, Mr. W. Robinson presiding over a fair attendance of members assembled to hear Mr. T. Harrison (Altrincham) give a most interesting and instructive lecture, namely, "Seeds and Food: Their Uses and Effects." The lecturer classified them as follows: Hard food, soft food, green food, flesh-forming, heat-giving, tonic and conditioning seeds. To begin with hard food, he was in favour of a good Turkish, but great care must be taken in buying this. See that it is clean, he said, bright and brownish in appearance, free from grit. He advised sifting the seed before using, as it was well worth the little extra trouble to free it from all dust; give this, together with a little mixed seeds, such as rape, etc., added to counteract the fattening effects. Flesh-forming seeds: Hemp, sunflower; heat-giving: oats, groats; tonic: maw, gold of pleasure, red and white millet; conditioning: dandelion, lettuce, teasle, thistle; soft food: egg and bread, egg and biscuit, Madeira cake, baked rice pudding, also "Harrison pudding"; green food: for choice, watercress well washed with a little salt in water, then rinsed in clean water, chicken weed, dandelion, discontinuing the latter after the first nest, as it assists to force nature. As a stock mixture he used canary, rape, hemp, inga, and sunflower all the year round; for winter use, groats, crushed oats, and quaker oats, thrown in bottom of cage. Before breeding: Cod liver oil, or biscuit foods. Nesting: Inga. Feeding young: Egg and biscuit, hemp, green food, using the green food as soon as the young were hatched, as he contended that it assists nature. He condemned the use of dog biscuit, as it creates scurvy. Weaning: Egg and biscuit, ground hemp. Take a quantity of hemp, place it in a cloth, and wipe clean; then put it through the grinder, afterwards picking out as many of the husks as possible. Never mix ground hemp with egg food, he said, as it contains a fair amount of dirt which will adhere to the soft food, and is very injurious to the birds. For moulting he preferred sunflower to linseed, as it was more nourishing and gave a better polish to the feather.

After the lecture many questions were asked Mr. Harrison, who answered them in a very straightforward way. A vote of thanks, moved by Mr. Downing, seconded by Mr. Booth, and supported by the chairman, was heartily given. Next meeting April 23rd; mind the change of date. We are to have Mr. Downing. Members and friends, don't miss it, it will be a treat.—J. Spencer, Hon. Sec.

CHELTENHAM C.B.S.

Lecture on Norwich Plainheads by Mr. Houghton.

A pouring wet night was responsible for a rather small attendance of members to hear a paper on "The Norwich Plainhead," by the well-known breeder and exhibitor, Mr. J. Houghton (Gloucester). Before calling upon Mr. Houghton, the usual routine business was transacted, which included the election of four new members, and the appointment of a small committee to arrange for new headquarters, as unfortunately we shall probably be unable to use the present room much longer. Chairman, Mr. Lewis. Mr. Houghton, without any preamble, came straight to the point, and gave his hearers the benefit of his experience. A show bird, he said, must not be more than 6½ inches in length, of a thick set type, somewhat resembling the Bullfinch in shape, with a round, full neat head, a short thick neck, merging gracefully into a broad full chest, and the body short, with a wide and well-filled in back, the tail short, compact and well carried, the wings being well braced to the body, but never crossing. The legs to be well set back, and both these and the feet free from coarseness, and clear in colour. The plumage should be short and close fitting, and perfectly free from any coarseness or roughness at the sides, thighs, or round base of tail, and the feathers of a soft, silky texture, with a brilliant sheen. The roundness of the head must be well finished off with a short, stout beak, clear in colour. Although stoutly built, it must not be clumsy, and the bird should stand well across the perch. It is a safe rule to endeavour to get as much of the bird as possible in front of the perch, and as little as possible behind.

To breed a show specimen, I should, he said, prefer a buff cock to yellow hen, as with the buff cock you get more size and bone than from a yellow cock. You should always look to the cock for size, and the hen for type and quality.

Mr. Houghton then went on to explain his methods of pairing, and strongly deprecated the use of Cinnamons, to increase colour, as by doing so you lose type and stamina, adding that he had in his room 30 to 40 per cent. of Green or marked birds, as green blood not only produces colour, but quality of feather as well. He also warned his hearers against trying to increase size by the use of Crested or Lancashire blood, as it took 3 or 4 years of judicious mating to breed it out again. Mr. Houghton then turned his attention to the novice, and gave a lot of useful hints as to trimming claws and beaks, caging and staging for shows, etc., and in conclusion said he should be pleased to answer any questions or make any further explanation on any points not quite clear.

This the members took due advantage of and an interesting discussion took place, in which Mr. J. H. Payne (whom we were all pleased to see) took part. A vote of thanks to Mr. Houghton was proposed by Mr. A. Smith, seconded by Mr. Hayling, and unanimously passed. The Secretary announced that Mr. Payne had promised a special prize for the best yellow Canary at the next first feather show.—A. S. Treasure.

HOW TO MAKE A SIMPLE WIRE FRONT.

This Contribution is No. 2 of a practical and helpful series dealing with Bird-room Requisites and How they are Made.

HAVING spoken of the making of a large flight-cage in the previous article of this series, we will turn our attention to the wire front. Probably few fanciers, even if they make their own cages, attempt to make the wire-work, but prefer to buy the fronts ready made. They are very cheap, granted, but for a large cage like this, it will certainly save a little if he makes his own.

Essential Items Easily Obtainable.

Bird-cage wire is now obtainable of almost every ironmonger, moreover, most dealers who keep foods, etc., stock it. The wire is usually obtainable in long, straight lengths of four feet, made of iron, but covered with a thin film of tin which renders soldering extremely simple. Cage wire costs 6d. per pound and between 25 and 30 lengths make up one pound. In addition, punched bars are sold. These also are four feet in length, and are really strips of tinned iron; they are "punched" with holes through which the wires exactly pass. Moreover, different meshes can be obtained, but for Canaries and similar birds half-inch (or five-eighth) mesh is the best, which, of course, means that the holes in the punched bars are half an inch apart. It will thus be seen that fronts of any size can be made up.

I now want to say a few words concerning soldering. When once this subject is understood it will be possible to make not only wire fronts, but many other little articles such as seed-hoppers, drinkers, finger-drawers, egg-drawers, racks for nesting materials, etc., etc., all of which will receive attention later in this series. Soldering has lately been greatly simplified, and the spirits of salt and zinc flux (chloride of zinc) and resin are now things of the past. Of course, we are not now dealing with work done by the plumber, but with little jobs easily accomplished by model-makers and bird-cage makers.

Very convenient fluxes in the form of pastes are now obtainable in tins at 6d. each, known as "Fluxite," and also "Rozinal." The writer has used both, and has found them excellent, a single tin lasting for a long time. With these pastes, of course, the ordinary soft solder is still to be used, but this also is inexpensive, sufficient for a number of jobs being obtainable for 3d.

Replacing the Soldering Iron.

Another simplification of soldering has been brought about by the introduction of "Tinol," but this is a rather more expensive method. However, to give the reader some idea, I may say that I have made the wire front for the large flight-cage, and have done one or two other little jobs with a single sixpenny tin of "Tinol." Now this again is a paste, but it differs from the two above-mentioned in that no additional solder is necessary. It appears to be a substance akin to "Fluxite," to which has been added finely powdered solder. At any rate it is only necessary to smear a little upon the parts to be joined and heat. With all due respect to it, however, I must say that a stronger job can be made with "Fluxite" and solder, although for the requirements of a bird fancier it is quite strong enough.

A soldering iron is a most unfit tool for our purpose. For a soldering iron to be of any use at all, it must have a good large copper "bit," which is very clumsy for delicate work. If the size of the "bit" is diminished, then the capacity for holding heat is almost diminished until, by the time we have got a tool small enough for the purpose, it will hardly hold heat for a moment, and to solder with it will mean running backwards and forwards to the kitchen fire.

A Blow-pipe Preferable.

A blow-pipe is far preferable (for soldering, I mean). Last year in CAGE BIRDS the writer explained the working of a simple blow-pipe, which is ideal for jobs like this. Fig. 1 will recall it. Gas comes up the straight tube and burns at the end, and air from the lungs is forced along the other tube, thus reducing the shaky yellow flame into a finely pointed blue flame of intense heat. Two pieces of rubber tubing are attached one leading to the gas supply, and the other to the mouth. The size of the flame is, of course, regulated from the gas tap, and the amount of "wind."

Just for an example of the actual procedure of soldering, suppose Fig. 2 represents a section through a punched bar (much enlarged) with a wire running through the hole, it being necessary to unite these two. Firstly, supposing "Fluxite" (or "Rozinal") is being used. With a match-stick smear a very little over the part where the solder is to run as shown in the shaded part of Fig. 3; then cut from the stick of solder a tiny knob about the size of a couple of hemp seeds. Place this at the side, as shown in the drawing, and then with the blow-pipe apply a fine flame for a few seconds, and when the solder begins to melt, poke it into position with a hat-pin or piece of wire when it will suddenly melt entirely and make an exceedingly neat joint, as shown in Fig. 4.

A Saving of Time.

It is usually not necessary to poke it into position, but it is always best to have a piece of wire ready. Of course, when a number of wires have to be soldered, it will save time to cut up the little knobs of solder first. This is easily and quickly done with an old chisel and a block of hard wood.

If we had been using "Tinol," we should have just smeared a little upon the wires instead of the "Fluxite," then applied the flame, as before, until we saw that the tiny particles of solder in the paste had melted and run together, and united the two wires.

The Writer's Method of Wiring.

Now, as to the actual wire front of the flight-cage. We shall require two pounds of wire, and five lengths of punched bar of ½-in. mesh. I do not know of the method used by the professional wire worker in making a large front like this. The method the writer used, and it proved most satisfactory, was to build it upon a framework. If there is any of the hundred feet of strips left over from the cage, this will come in admirably. First cut the two uprights, and then the two cross-pieces, and nail together so as to make a frame the exact size of the front required. When nailing on the cross-pieces, see that the bottom one is upon the opposite side of the uprights to the top. The use of this will become apparent later.

See that the corners are perfectly square, and then cut four of the punched bars a little longer than required (they may be shortened when the front is complete) with a strong pair of wire-cutters.

One bar will have to be at the very bottom, in fact resting upon the wood of the framework, as shown in Fig. 5; one will have to form the top; and the other two will have to be at distances of one-third and two-thirds up respectively. Nails should be driven into the wooden uprights on both sides, upon which these bars will rest. They will sag in the middle, but are propped up with pieces of wood of correct length during soldering. It will be noticed that two bars rest upon the top nail. The uppermost of these will eventually form the top, but at present it must rest where it is.

Making the Doors.

Before commencing work, it will be necessary to decide about doors, it being best in this case to have a large swing door at each end, two-thirds the height of the whole front, or up to the second bar. The position of these doors, about five holes from each end, and twelve or fourteen holes wide, should be clearly marked on the woodwork, as well as four or five extra long wires, which will enter the wood stays and hold the front in position.

It will now be best to count the number of wires required (omitting doors and these long wires just referred to) and to cut these exactly before going further.

The procedure after this is obvious, and need not be enlarged upon. Solder the bottoms first, and then the first bar from the bottom, keeping it horizontal by propping it up with a piece of wood as you go along. Then solder the wires along the next bar, and finally gently lift the top bar into position, and solder that also; but be careful not to lift the top bar right off or great difficulty will be experienced in getting it into position again.

A Glass Bead is Useful.

It will be found that two bars go across the door spaces. These should now be cut off, and the doors made, these latter being a little shorter than the door-spaces, to allow of free play. An extra hole should be left on one side of the short bars which go across the doors, through which one of the long wires must pass to act as a hinge. It is a good plan to thread a large glass bead, or short length of brass tubing, on to this "door-post," to keep the door from grating against the bottom bar. It is now only necessary to fill in the short wires above the doors, and also the long wires (which, of course, is done after the front is removed from the framework) and the work is complete.

Where perches are to go, short lengths of wire can be soldered in any position required. Anything which may have been omitted from this description can be easily gleaned from the drawing (Fig. 6), which shows only one half of the front; moreover, the full number of wires is not shown for the sake of clearness.

Holes having been bored in the mainstays to correspond exactly with the larger wires, the whole front may be raised into position. A single short length of wire protruding at right angles from the door will prevent it opening inwards, and the usual form of twisted wire fastener will keep it closed.

And now the tale is told, and I think if the fancier follows these instructions, he cannot go far wrong. Smaller fronts can, of course, be made in a similar way, although a framework is hardly necessary for them; sliding doors are easily put on instead of swing doors, and the method of fitting these is too obvious to need explanation.

The Mighty Mite:

How He May be Avoided, or Exterminated.

By CLAUDE ST. JOHN.

THIS correspondent is also probably in error in asking the difference between red and black species. Candidly, I do not know of any black mite which infests birds as the red mite does. The red mite will be found in all shades, from scarlet to the deepest or blackish crimson, according to age, and doubtless the extent of their orgies.

In seeking to confirm the veracity of the assertion that some folk never see them in their rooms, the writer evidently doubts the information. Within certain limits he need not do so. Although wherever birds are kept there is always the possibility of their natural parasitic enemies putting in an appearance, there is no doubt whatever that absolute cleanliness and constant attention, with efforts judiciously directed to prevent the insects gaining a footing, regular bathing of the birds, and, above all, the use of cages affording the least possible harbour for the pest, will succeed in keeping the insects at a minimum. Relax these constant efforts to keep them at bay and as sure as night follows day, they will appear.

Destructive Measures.

The methods of destruction are legion, some of them far more odorous than effective. Dealing with the nests the correspondent wished to know if anything stronger than insect powder could be used with safety. To this I would reply that some insect powders are of little use as exterminators of red mites, but used in sufficient quantity hamper their movements, just as any thick covering of fine dust would do. If proper efforts are carried out about the cage and room generally to keep the pest down, there will be very little risk of the nest being badly affected.

Never wait until the mites are in evidence and troublesome before directing efforts against them. This is the real secret of keeping them invisible. In Part II. of "Our Canaries" will be found details of insecticides suitable for all purposes, and the methods of applying them.

None, however, is more terribly destructive to these pests, and very few quite so thorough and inodorous in a few minutes after application as the camphor and spirit solution I have frequently advised in these columns. An ounce of the former dissolved in half a pint of methylated spirit is all that is required, and it may be painted about the cages or the ends of perches, etc., with the greatest safety and freedom whilst the birds are occupying them, and it penetrates to the utmost depths of the tiniest holes or cracks, and carries destruction with it both to mites and their eggs.

Its one drawback is that if the cages are done over with a spirit stain or varnish the fluid destroys this covering. But the way out is to finish cages with a pure copal or oil varnish, or even leave them in the raw wood, which, if a hard and smoothly sand-papered fancy wood, looks quite as nice as French polish, and considerably better than most amateur attempts at staining and polishing.

Good Substitutes.

Fir-tree oil may be used in a similar way, but it is rather expensive when one has to deal with a number of cages. The same may be said of quassia extract. The latter is useful to add to the bath occasionally, as it helps a little to render the plumage disagreeable to the mites. Jeyes' Fluid, Izal, and carbolic fluid are commonly used, and all are good. Sulphuretted potash is also said to be very potent, though I have no personal experience of it. It may also be used now and again in the bath as a deterrent. But whatever is used it must be applied regularly in all likely harbouring-places—once a week is a safe plan all the year round, and during the hot summer months, and when birds are moulting (at this period they are peculiarly liable to attack) twice a week would be better.

A Thorough Overhaul.

When a cage or stack of cages has become really infested nothing short of the most thorough overhaul will be of the least service, and it is of the utmost importance that the work should be carried through from start to finish without interruption; and nothing in, around, or connected with the cages or supports, must be overlooked. The slightest omission may result in the mites putting in an appearance in renewed force in a very short time. To make doubly sure of successful extermination the insecticides should be used with rather more than less regularity for some little time after the overhaul has been completed. If the operations can be extended over a few days, and the preliminary dressing with insecticide applied to the cages three or four times at intervals of a day between each, the result is far more likely to be a permanent success.

A TWENTY-YEAR-OLD CANARY.

My Canary died on March 24 last; he was hatched about June, 1892, and was, therefore, about three months short of twenty years old—almost a record, I believe, writes "A. H. B." in "Country Life." A beautiful songster, always in excellent health and spirits, very tame and companionable, hopping about the table at meal times and "helping himself." Except during the last few months he regularly took his "cold tub" in the morning. He had not sung for a year or two, but used to "soliloquise" in a sort of low "cheeping" tone during most of the day, and often during the evening as well.

Correspondence.

The Yorkshire Union and Its Method of Balloting.

Sir,—On Tuesday, April 2, at a representative meeting of our society, a resolution was unanimously passed expressing our entire confidence in the management and the officials of the Yorkshire Union, and also disassociating our society from the controversy now going on.

A. Tillotson.

Secretary, Shipley C.S.

Saved by Its Foster-mother.

Sir,—I thought I would write and let you know of a recent experience with my Canaries. A friend of mine living in the same house had a German hen with four eggs, all fertile, due to hatch April 4. All went well till she hatched them. Then she packed the young to death, except one, which I managed to save. Having a Norwich hen with two young, ten hours old, I thought I would give it to her. As she happened to come off the nest to get some food, I placed the extra youngster in the nest; the latter was then only ten minutes old. I am very pleased to say that all three birds are being fed and getting on well. My hen had only two eggs to hatch. I would like to know if this has ever been done before, as I have not read of it. Pleased to say that I have got two more readers for Cage Birds.

W. Bibe.

[It is not by any means uncommon for hen Canaries to take to and rear young birds hatched out but neglected by the other hens, especially when there is but little difference 'twixt the age of the newcomers and that of their own young.—Editor.]

A Mirror Pairing Device.

Sir,—This idea is one I find very useful in the breeding season, as I have no doubt many other readers will. It is specially adapted to single compartment breeders, which are often so strongly recommended. It does away with the inconvenient method of hanging the cock bird on to the front of the cage. All that is required is a music stand, which can be adjusted to any height, and a mirror. By means of the mirror set on the stand the birds are in full view of each other, and it is wonderful to see how soon the birds pair up. I wish Cage Birds every success.

The Judging of Quality Linnet Song.

Sir,—I was very pleased to see that my letter had met the eyes of at least one reader who is good enough to try and enlighten the novices how a quality song should be marked. I thank Mr. Lambert for his answer, and I am satisfied with his letter, as far as it goes, but I should like to see some other judge's opinion of the way a song should be judged. I have been under the opinion that there should be so many points given for certain notes, and then at the end of the contest counted up, the bird with the most points to win. This has been argued amongst our judges, and they say that it is impossible to have points for the Linnet's song. Well, I should like some judge to answer that. Also, I find from arguments after our contest on Saturday, that this has been a sore question for some time; they never have had any acknowledged way of judging the song. I think it is time there should be something done in this, as around our district there are a great number of Linnet fanciers, but the present way of judging keeps them from competing at contests.

The Dipper's First Appearance on the Show Bench.

Sir,—In reply to Mr. Fishburn about the Dipper, the argument was as to who exhibited this species first. I claim to be years before him; and as I regard mine being "fresh from their native haunts," what about his bird? I hope readers aren't running away with the idea that his specimen is a hand-reared one. I happen to know when and where he got it.

The Proposed Newcastle Society in the Interests of Novices.

Sir,—On April 4, at Mr. Purvis's Cafe, Clayton Street, opposite Bird Market, Newcastle, a few gentlemen met to form a society in the interests of novice fanciers. Mr. Elliott took the chair, and a discussion took place until late in the evening. It was decided to adjourn the meeting until April 18.

An Appreciated Idea.

Sir,—Kindly spare me space in your correspondence columns to thank Mr. E. Faulkner, who so kindly gave us in Cage Birds of March 30, his illustrated idea of a cheap egg-mincer. I have since made one for myself; the cost was nil, for the piece of perforated zinc and sufficient wood I begged. I have given it a fair trail; it works splendidly, and I can recommend it strongly. Undoubtedly this is one of the simplest, cheapest, and most useful "mincers," and quite as valuable also as a seed sieve, proving a great boon, both to birds and to aviary. Try it, and prove it, is my advice.

Hy. Cooke.

The Non-attendance of Members at Meetings.

Sir,—I see by the various reports in the Fancy Press that secretaries are all up in arms at the non-attending members. I would like to draw the attention of the members in this district who are satisfied to get the business of the society through these reports that it is not fair to the management to endeavour each month to get something good for each meeting to withhold their attendance and support. However enthusiastic these officials might be, it seems valuable time lost when only a few make an appearance at the meetings.

Some Truths About the Scotch Fancy Canary.

Sir,—Replying to Mr. Smith and "Shamrock," I agree with them both on some points. The main point is, we want the Scotch Fancy in the front rank. We want breeders to put their shoulders to the wheel and not rest till we have our favourite (the Scotch Fancy) once more in the front rank. That is the first point to consider. But how is it to be done? Well, one thing is, we all must do our part. Some will say, what is my part? I would say, send a few entries to every show that gives classes for Scotch Fancies; that will encourage all show committees to allot classes for our favourite. Let these people see that our "bird o' circle" is not dead, nor even dying. And let them give us fair prize money; we will then patronise their shows, and fill the classes, as we did in days of yore. I think "Shamrock" quotes too high in his price for a good pair of good stock birds. I know birds have been sold at a higher price; but I bought a pair at £5, and was able to win a good many prizes with them. I am glad that Mr. Smith is able to let us here in Ireland know that we can get stock birds at £2 each. I was over in Glasgow two years ago, seeing a friend, who is a breeder of the Scotch Fancy, and he took me to a lot of breeders; but their prices were very high, and if I live to the end of this season I will be over again and will be able perhaps to give Mr. Smith a call. I must draw to a close by thanking Mr. Smith and "Shamrock" for the friendly way they answered my letter, and I am thankful to you, Mr. Editor, for allowing us space in Cage Birds, which I wish every success.

William Dunlop.

Sir,—In my earlier days of Canary fancying, our favourite bird was the Scotch Fancy. He was then the hoop, or half-moonlike type, so small that you could nearly slip a finger ring over his head and bring it off at his tail—the thin circled bird, called by name "The Glasgow Don." I have never known what cross produced him, and have often wondered where he came from. My first recollection of them is that there were plenty to be had, and that they were cheap. Almost every fancier had a pair. By and bye someone crossed him with the Belgian, and gave him the shoulder. Then I remember a half-Belgian, half-Scotch Fancy kind of bird which was all the rage. Then came birds resembling the Belgian, with the hoop and long, reachy neck and snakelike head, noble-looking birds, the admiration of all, and well entitled to the name "King of the Fancy." Mr. Dunlop and "Shamrock" would fain make us believe the Belgian was King. It's only a bird of position, as they say, lacking the action and nerve of the Scotch Fancy. They would like to see this grand variety brought to a level with other birds. Well, it is still a favourite in Scotland, and were it not such a high-class bird and so high-priced, it would soon become a popular variety. Few working men can pay out £8 for a pair of birds, and run the risk of getting no returns. That's what keeps this variety in the background. I admit the Belgian has a stylish and aristocratic form, but it does not afford the delight and bewitching appearance of the Scotch Fancy. I am a believer in pedigree, and think it a well-known fact that birds do to a certain extent throw back to their kind; such being the case, I like my stock birds of a high-class strain, and think the great cause of so few really good birds being bred is that people are not fortunate enough to possess these high-class birds. A fancier has to see the points wanting in the hen bird, and get a male with these points. When properly mated, give them the same chance as the Norwich or Border, and you will find they will bring up their young quite as well as other varieties. I don't know what Mr. Dunlop would like to hear more about our ideal bird, the Scotch Fancy.

Thoughts from Canada on the Crystal Palace Show.

A Suggestion to Hybrid Breeders.

Sir,—Your report of the great Crystal Palace show of 1912, which appeared in Cage Birds on February 10, came safely to hand by last mail. I can assure you it was very interesting to me in this far-off land, and I was pleased to see the show all through had been a great success, but sorry to learn the weather had been very severe, which would no doubt tell severely against the chances of many a good bird, particularly those that are bred and kept in warm rooms. I notice the class provided for the new variety, viz., the white Canary brought out an entry of 9, all of the Yorkshire type. I am sure this would be very interesting to all lovers of the Canary, and I am inclined to think before many years we will have the White variety in nearly all types of present-day Canaries. I notice a falling-off in entries in one or two varieties, viz., Belgians, Scotch Fancies, and Lancashires. There seem to be no young recruits taking up those varieties, as the old hands that used to breed and exhibit them either leave the Fancy or pass over to the great majority. Why this is so I am at a loss to understand, unless it be the money that it takes to buy good birds of any of these rarities. I was pleased to see that Mules, Hybrids, and British birds were well represented, both in numbers and quality throughout, as those are the sections in which my interest chiefly centres. I am sure Mr. Dewar would have no easy task in selecting the leading bird from such a grand muster of the different kinds of Mules and Hybrids. I notice that another new Hybrid has been added to the list—the Greenfinch-Chaffinch. If this be a genuine Hybrid, it will go to open out a wide field thought impossible a very few years ago among Hybrid breeders. It will, perhaps, not be very long before we see crosses from the Chaffinch with all the members of the Finch family, including the long talked-of Chaffinch and Canary Mule that has been tried for so long, but has never shown its face yet. I would urge Hybrid breeders to go in and try for it, as in my opinion it is just as possible to be bred as the Greenfinch and Chaffinch Hybrid. I would also urge breeders who can provide suitable conditions, such as aviaries outside, to try to get Bramblefinch and Greenfinch and Bramblefinch and Bullfinch Hybrids. Both the Chaffinch and Bramblefinch may be tried now with all the other kinds of Finches as the chances seem just as equal, seeing that the ice has been broken with the Chaffinch as one parent.

Suggested New Classification for British Birds.

The National British Bird & M.C. Tackles a Difficult Problem.

Sir,—The National British Bird and Mule Club has drawn up a new classification of British birds, in which the species are named, in order to obviate the use of such terms as "larger than" and "not larger than," "seed eating" and "insectivorous," "migratory" and "resident," and thereby to avoid incorrect entries. Further, in the mixed classes an attempt is made to group together birds which may be fairly placed in competition one with the other. The classification is for 30 classes, and suggestions are offered to meet cases in which fewer classes are to be given. The number of classes may be extended by making separate classes for any of the species which are herein grouped together, or adding classes for field-moulted birds. When "hen" class or classes are provided, after the word "Song Thrush" should be added "cock or hen."

Proposed Cage Bird Club for Wood Green and District.

The Type of Modern Winning Norwich Plainheads.

Sir,—How pleased I was to read "Sub Rosa's" remarks in your issue of April 6. This fancier seems to see these bird in the same light as myself. When I bred the winning unflighted buff at Manchester, in the novice section, I thought him as being near the ideal, but when he met Mr. Davies's bird a week later at Liverpool, in the champion section, I could see that it failed in colour and slightly in size, and I take my hat off to Mr. Davies for having bred what I consider the best buff ever shown in my short career.

R. P. BIXTER.

Sir,—I quite agree with "Sub Rosa" in his statements regarding some judges selecting a different type of bird than that of the standard model, and I hope the day is not far distant when breeders and exhibitors will insist upon every judge having one and the same ideal bird to go by. We must admit that the present day haphazard judging is murdering the Fancy and making our shows a lottery. I have been some years in the Fancy now, but have got so disgusted with the present system of judging that I have ceased exhibiting altogether, as I have found out that some judges do not know their own mind for more than a week.

ROB ROY.

The Proposed Norwich Plainhead Club for the Midlands.

Sir,—Mr. Anderton still asserts that there is no necessity for a Norwich specialist club in the Midlands, and says that if one were formed it would have to be successful almost beyond possibility for it to justify its existence, while a strong specialist club for the variety is already at work in that district. That remains to be seen. At any rate, the possibilities are enormous. From hundreds of Plainhead breeders in the Midlands, only quite a handful are members of the N.P.C., consequently when the voting papers are sent out, any nominations for the committee from the Midlands are outvoted by the Lancashire men. I do not say it is not right. I do not suppose the Midland men grumble to any great extent. If the majority of members were located in the Midlands, perhaps—nay, I am confident—the conditions would be reversed. Speaking generally, I do not think Canary fanciers are more selfish than any other unit of society, perhaps less so; but only when selfishness is entirely eliminated from human nature can we expect a majority on the committee from the district where the minority of voters reside; therefore it naturally follows the whole of the committee are located in one district. That in itself is enough to justify the starting of a new club. Even if there were a few committeemen from the Midlands, it would require one with more enthusiasm even than Mr. Anderton himself has for the Norwich Plainhead in general, and for the N.P.C. in particular, to travel, say, from Stafford or Gloucester to a meeting in Manchester at his own expense and loss of time. Of course, it goes without saying the meeting would be held in Lancashire; the greatest good for the greatest number; therefore, even were there some Midland men on the committee the chances are they would be absent in those circumstances, with the result that when the allocation of patronage to shows came on the agenda, human nature would again assert itself, and they would give the patronage to shows in the district that affords easy access to the majority of the members—a policy in which they are justified. In this world it seems to be every one for himself and to the devil with the hindmost; and in Norwich Plainhead circles it seems to have been the horned gentleman's special privilege to look after the Midland men! Why they have stood it so long is "passing the wit of man." Most of the shows are held in the Lancashire area, and I think only one Midland man followed the whole of the shows, which shows that they are not over enthusiastic about it, while at Derby, the only show in the Midlands, only those in the running for the specials patronised it (which shows that even the Lancashire men will not have long railway journeys), with the result that, so far as the Norwich Plainhead classes were concerned, the show had a great loss. That entirely does away with Mr. Anderton's statement that there is a strong specialist club in the Midlands. Mr. Anderton is sure I do not wish him to understand that I advocate a multitude of specialist clubs as advantageous or efficient. He is quite right; I do not. But I do think one in the Midlands would be advantageous, and it only requires a few fanciers with the enthusiasm of himself, and its efficiency may be taken for granted. I agree with him where he says that one supreme club for each variety would beget greater strength, but it does not necessarily follow that because a club is strong it is advantageous. Surely Mr. Anderton does not wish us to think he is advocating fanciers from John o' Groats to Land's End to show in the same competition? It is absurd. One club would be strong, but the competitious would have to be localised for it to be advantageous. Mr. Anderton gives us his ideas of the duties of a specialist club: (1) "The safeguarding of the interests of its variety." Most decidedly; that is why they want one in the Midlands, because of the short-sighted policy of the N.P.C. (2) "Distribution of complete information on the variety." What information is distributed is done by the Fancy Press. (3) "Institution of competitions on a larger scale than could be promoted by local societies." If we can call the granting of the patronage of the N.P.C. to one show in the Midlands on a large scale, then I have done. (4) "Its encouragement and extension in all districts." Yet he wants to stop its extension in the Midlands! I have a great admiration for Mr. Anderton's character and enthusiasm as a fancier, but I must come to the conclusion that in this case he is somewhat contradictory. Mr. Anderton further says that "a fancier's natural ambitions should lead him to look for the most extensive conquests" That is all right so far as the man is concerned who has a deep, well-lined pocket, one who can spend a sovereign to win 10s., but I am afraid that most of us would rather exhibit nearer home and win more of the "filthy lucre." For myself, I prefer less honour, smaller railway journeys and charges, and more "siller." I am at one with a great deal that Mr. Anderton says in the latter part of his letter, but where he says that if the N.P.C. were to confine their sphere of interest to Lancashire and Cheshire it would gain enormously in strength of membership and finances, I think he just about gets home. I could not wish for anything better myself, and with that admission of Mr. Anderton's I feel justified in wishing the Midland N.P.C. a speedy and unqualified success.

Marrying the Birds.

Readers who have paired Canaries for breeding and find they quarrel should put the cock in a show cage fastened to the breeding cage for a few days; after this they will soon take to housekeeping.—A. Wells (Chatteris).

To Prevent Egg-binding.

When young hens are about to lay their first egg, I find the best thing to do is to place a piece of onion and a piece of suet between the wires for them to peck at. I have done it every year, and it is the best thing that I have found to prevent egg-binding.—F. Miles, Wootton.

Forcing Early Dandelion.

In the early conditioning of birds dandelion leaves are perhaps the most useful, but the difficulty is in procuring a good supply. My method is to cover the old plants about Christmas with a handful of ordinary chaff. This forces the young shoots up, and before the pairing time you will have a good supply of tender green leaves, clean and sweet.—J. Tregenza (Rostrick).

A Cheap Nesting Material.

To make nice warm nesting material, procure a ball of cotton wick. Take your biscuit mill and run some lengths of the cotton through, feeding it gradually. The teeth of the mill tear it into shreds, similar to cotton wool. The birds build a splendid nest with this, and it is soft and cosy. One ball of wick, costing fourpence, will make enough for twelve pairs of birds.—Robert Middleton (159, Bothal Terrace, Pegswood, Morpeth).

Scraping the Wires with Beak.

This noisy habit is very annoying to the owner, and other people as well, especially if the bird be of value as a singer or show bird. I have cured my bird of this habit by having the wires of the cage reversed, i.e., having them fixed running straight across, so that when the bird attempts to strike the wires its beak meets no resistance. The bird forgets the habit after a month or so and can then be placed in its ordinary cage again.—Alf. G. Lindsey (c.o. 30, Southgate Road, London, N.).

For Birds that Eat Eggs.

If there is any fancier troubled with cocks or hens that eat their eggs, try this remedy; it is a certain cure. Take one of the eggs and make a hole at both ends with a needle, and gently blow out the contents. Mix a little mustard with water and fill the egg with this, placing pieces of gummed paper over the holes. Put back into the nest. The birds will make for the egg, but you will find they will not interfere afterwards, once treated in this manner.—M. E. Sims (15, Wright's Terrace, Grace Street, Barnsley).

A Very Useful Article.

Permanganate of potash, which can be bought at any chemist's at 3d. per ounce, is not only one of the best disinfectants we have, but it can be put to a variety of uses. Dissolve one ounce in two quarts of cold water, bottle and cork tightly. When giving birds drinking water add two drops to every pint. This will not only disinfect, but keep water sweet throughout the hottest day. Sprinkle a little about your bird room in the hot weather. For colouring cages, when new, nothing is better, and if two coats are put on and then varnished, the result will astonish you. This, of course, is used direct from the bottle and not again diluted. If a little is added when washing out cages, it will destroy all red mite; dip your perches and nest pans into it. Altogether, it is a boon to the fancier.—R. Fillden Richards (Cynwyd Fechan, Cymoyd, near Corwen, North Wales).

Ought Closed Rings to be Abolished?

Sir,—I was interested in the letters in CAGE BIRDS, as I intended using closed rings this year. Will other readers be good enough to send to you their experiences on this important subject?

G. M. O.

Condemnation from Stoke

Sir,—I think you ought to hear about a discussion which took place at the last meeting of the Stoke-on-Trent C.B.A. on marking rings and their use, though no doubt our respected secretary will put it in his report also, though I have not seen it yet. The members present were almost all against the use of marking rings of any kind, whether closed or removible, but the former kind in particular, and many of them related the very bad effects they experienced when they tried to use them, the number of young birds which had been lost being an eye-opener, and enough to prevent any sensible man who values the lives and welfare of his young birds from ever being tempted to use closed rings. In fact, I do not think many rings of any sort will be used by our members; the liability of accident is too great. It is a bad enough task to get birds from valuable pairs reared as it is, without "asking for trouble" by interfering with the nestlings, and either spoiling them yourself or getting them spoilt afterwards by their parents through the presence of the rings. A good many of those present at the meeting, too, considered the exhibiting of birds wearing marking rings (which can be the best of all "distinguishing marks," and lead to no end of trouble in this way) to be very undesirable and objectionable. I only hope other societies will take the matter up in the interests of their members—especially the novices, for the old hands have "had some" and know better.

A POTTER.

The Dangers Real Enough.

Sir,—I should like to point out the inconsistency of the remarks anent the evils of the practice of using closed rings, and its danger to the birds, which were recently quoted in your columns. The difficulties and dangers arising from a working-man with hard-skinned fingers, and perhaps a trifle "clumsy-fisted," meddling with such a delicate thing as a Canary at six or seven days old are real enough, but it reads really funny when one remembers how unconcernedly the author of these remarks advises the same horny-handed sons of toil to help a young Canary to hatch if it is disposed to delay its appearance a little beyond the normal time. A working man is incapable of handling a young Canary when six or seven days old without great risk of injury, but is capable of tampering with it before it has left the shell. Passing strange, surely!

A LOOKER-ON.

THE HISTORY OF THE ROLLER CANARY.

A lecture delivered by Mr. F. A. Lester before the Wimbledon and District C.B.S. on April 1st.

On April 1, at Mr. A. L. Johnston's Broadway Restaurant, Mr. F. A. Lester, the chairman of the British Roller C.C., gave a most interesting lecture on the production and progress of the Roller Canary. Mr. W. H. Stoakley presided, and some sixty or more members and visitors were present. Mr. Lester, after expressing the pleasure it gave him to be present, said the Roller Canary emanated from the same source as all other Canaries, that was from the wild Canary, but whereas other varieties had been bred for size, or shape, or feather, or colour, the Roller Canary had been bred and developed for its singing qualities only, and by selection and fixing of song brought to its present state of perfection. The development of these qualities was first taken up by the Germans about 200 years ago, principally by the miners of the Hartz Mountains.

Rollers were first introduced into England about sixty years ago, and found most favour among the miners and metal workers of Yorkshire and Lancashire. There were competitions for these birds as far back as forty years ago; but, coming to recent times, he said it was twelve years ago that a club called the British Roller C.C. came into existence, and all that had since been done with reference to these birds had practically been done by that club. There were now, up and down Great Britain, between five and six hundred breeders of this beautiful songster, which was amongst the finest of the songsters known.

Tours of Present-day Rollers.

The lecturer graphically described the quality and tone of the song, and said the tours of the present-day Roller consisted of from seven to ten different varieties, including the hollow roll, hollow bell roll, bass, schockel, flute, bell, water roll, water glucke, glucke and deep bubbling water tours, and other notes and songs emanating from those which had not yet been dignified with names. Dealing with the song of the Roller in general terms, he said a few years ago the Germans went in for purity of song, but the breeders in this country had concentrated their efforts more on getting a greater variety, and in this connection he said it was not possible to get one bird to sing the whole range of tours, as they got mixed and muddled after they got beyond a certain number. It was, he said, a very good bird which could attain six or seven satisfactorily, and this was only possible through the perfection the vocal organs had reached after 200 years of breeding and training. He mentioned that all Rollers are rung with closed rings, which placed everything in connection with its age and strain and wins above suspicion; and formed the source of a very interesting competition in the Roller Club, which last year issued 7,250 rings—a very great thing, he thought, for one society. The rings for Rollers had of necessity to be smaller than those for Norwich and Yorkshire Canaries, whose legs were larger and more bony than those of Rollers.

Tremendous Progress.

The lecturer next alluded to the tremendous progress made in the last ten years, both in breeding and exhibiting Rollers, and spoke of the various methods adopted by different breeders, although all had the one object in getting and training the birds to deliver their songs in a full and deep and quiet and reposeful manner, and with all the zest and strength possible. They were kept in closed cages, to enable them to acquire their notes, so that they might be a delight to listen to and give the full benefit of the education and training they received.

Speaking of the various clubs now in existence, he said that since the start of the British Roller C.C. in 1900, with about a dozen members, but now numbering 250, twelve or fifteen other clubs had been formed, all with a full and enthusiastic number of members, about 500 in all. He said he was very pleased that Mr. F. J. Randall, one of the members of the Wimbledon Society, after starting as a novice, had won the championship cup of the B.R.C.C. four times in succession, and the cup was now held by Mr. H. Veen, another member of the Wimbledon Society.

How Rollers Are Fed.

With regard to feeding, he said he was an ardent supporter of the mixed seed as against "all rape." The latter was very different to that used by breeders of other Canaries. It was specially imported from Germany, and was very sweet and nutritious, and contained everything to build up the birds' constitutions; indeed, the Germans said it made the song of the birds fed on it more mellow than those fed on mixed seed. He concluded a most interesting lecture by explaining the system of judging and the points awarded for various notes and tours.—A large number of questions were most satisfactorily and interestingly answered, and on the motion of the Chairman a vote of thanks to Mr. Lester was given by acclamation for his delightful discourse.

Votes of thanks were also accorded members of the Roller Club for the help they had given in bringing birds for exhibition and in other ways, Mr. Slade and Mr. Norris being specially mentioned, and the Chairman also spoke of the great assistance given by Mr. Veen in getting the lecturer, in advertising, and in other ways.

During the evening the Secretary, Mr. H. Smith, gave his report; Mrs. Thynne, a member of the society, who has recently undergone a serious operation, was welcomed back by the Chairman and congratulated on her recovery; two new members were nominated; and as the deputation from the London Federation was not present as promised, it was decided to take no further action as to reconsidering the resignation of the society from the Federation. It was announced that the Mayor of Wimbledon had forwarded one guinea as a subscription to the society, and that the Misses Liversage and Bodfish had kindly offered a cup, value £5, for competition amongst the Yorkshire exhibitors. A hearty vote of thanks was accorded the ladies by acclamation.—H. Smith, hon. sec.

BONNYRIGG C.B.S.

Meeting held Mar. 30, Foresters' Arms, Mr. A. Jardine (president) in chair. Mr. W. B. Smart (Loanhead) was admitted a new member. Consideration of F.F. show left over till next meeting. Secretary was instructed to write several judges, which I hope to advertise in due course.—J. Hamilton, Sec.

MUSSELBURGH O.S.

At meeting held 30th March it was decided to alter date of our annual show to 30th November, instead of 14th December, as we find the 14th December is clashing with other shows. Following classification was adopted: Fourteen open and 4 novices' classes; Borders, 10 open, 4 novice; British and Foreign, 3 Mule classes, 10 British, and 1 novice, and 4 foreign classes. Mr. John McLay (Kirkintilloch) was elected judge for Norwich; Mr. T. Arnott (Kirkcaldy) for Border Fancies, and Mr. R. Bald (Bathgate) for Mules, British and foreign birds. Next meeting, Cossar's Tea Rooms, High Street, 27th April.—W. Nisbet, Hon. Sec.

CRESTED CANARY CLUB.

The first batch of several hundred rings have been dispatched, and I should be pleased to hear from others desirous of adopting this method of identification, if they will kindly apply forthwith. Some fanciers appear somewhat sceptical as to the harm the rings will do during incubation in subsequent years. Although I have not used a closed ring, I have never removed the ordinary ring from the leg of my sitting hens, and have not found any ill effects from their continual use. I may here mention that the profit accruing from the sale of closed rings will be devoted as special prizes to birds wearing the clubs closed ring for 1912.—John Tyson, Hon. Sec.

CHESTER C.B.S.

Meeting Nag's Head Cocoa House, Foregate-street, March 26th, Mr. F. C. Parker presiding over a good attendance. Mr. W. Davies, assist.-sec., acted in place of the hon. sec., who was unable to attend, being indisposed. It was announced that Mrs. Way had kindly consented to act as president. This was received with much pleasure. The society is most fortunate in obtaining the support of one so popular and well known. Mrs. Way is a very keen competitor, and figures very prominently at most of the agricultural shows as a horsewoman, and frequently takes premier honours. It was further announced that Mr. S. Whitlow had kindly undertaken the vice-presidency for another year. Although Mr. Whitlow is unable to attend the meetings through business, he is always anxious to know how the society is progressing, and is ever ready to assist it financially; and at each show are to be seen some of his favourite Britishers. Several members were elected in addition to local ones. New members were made from Frodsham and Over Winsford. First Feather show business was gone into. Decided to hold same on a date in the first week in July. Intending members should join at once, and so become eligible to compete for Mr. Thompson's beautiful cup to be won outright at this show by the member gaining most points with four nominated young birds.—R. N. Williams, Sec.

COVENTRY GODIVA C.B.S.

Dinner and concert held at headquarters, "The Chequers" Hotel, March 29. The members took this opportunity of making a presentation of a splendid pair of bronzes to our late sec., Mr. R. Symonds. A capital dinner was provided by our host, a hearty vote of thanks being returned him, proposed by our chairman, Mr A. Howe, and seconded by Mr. J. Blackshaw, who stated, as one of the members who assisted in the formation of the society, that he knew how much we were indebted to our host, Mr. Busby. After a song by Mr. Rowley, accompanied on the piano by Mr. Johnson, the event of the evening took place, Mr. Busby being called upon, as president, to make the presentation. He said that nothing could give him greater pleasure, as when Mr. Symonds took over the secretaryship our society was in a very bad way indeed, but now to-day our society stood stronger in membership than it had ever done before, and he did not think many societies were in a better position. He felt sure most of this had come about through the thorough and courteous way our late sec. had done his work, and the esteem in which every member held him. He was glad to know we should still have Mr. Symonds with us, and he felt sure he would be a great assistance to our present secretary, Mr. H. Saunders, who, he felt sure, would be a worthy successor. Mr. Symonds said he never expected so much from the members, for what he had always tried to do was simply his duty, which he hoped to do in the future. The members sang "For he's a jolly good fellow." Songs were sung by our host's daughter and Messrs. Rowley, Clarke, Saunders, Wright, Johnson, and, last but not least, our host.—H. Saunders, sec.

KILMARNOCK C.B.F.C.

Lecture on "Canary Inbreeding" by Mr. H. Train.

At a meeting held Mar. 14th, at Temperance Hall, Mr. Hugh Train opened a discussion on inbreeding He spoke as follows:—When I suggested at the last general meeting that you might have a discussion on breeding, I thought perhaps it would draw out some to come to the meetings and get interested in the doings of the club. I am sure it might have fallen on some one much better than myself to champion the benefits of Canary breeding. But in my own simple way I will try to prove that to be a success you must revert to Canary inbreeding. I have been in the Fancy since I was a boy. I have seen a good deal of experiments tried, and I have been taught from the very first that it was no use going in for unrelated birds of any kind. I have known a fancier buy back a bird bred by himself that was the great grandsire of his winning bird, and saying before-hand that it would strike; and so it proved. They were the best birds of their class in this town, or in any other in Scotland. They won everywhere. No matter what kind of bird or beast you take to, you will find the breeder of experience going in for breeding in and out with his stud or strain. I will be challenged, I know, but you will find that the great Carbine race horse that belonged to the Duke of Portland, and for which £25,000 was paid, did not produce anything of very much consequence in the racing world; but the sons of Carbine mated back to mares of Musket, reproduced the stamina and endurance of the Great Carbine himself. Musket was the sire of Carbine. The same happens in everything else. In the case of pigeons I know father and daughter and mother and son are bred together in order to keep the strain running true, and that with champions, too. I have known of a bull dog, bred with a greyhound to give stamina and endurance, and the produce mated back right times with pure greyhounds, made names for themselves. I know of lots of cases of single birds breeding with their sons and the offspring from this cross bred winners every year, although the year when the cross was instituted the produce was not of much value; all the same, they were better than the ones being bred with. Fanciers in general believe that inbreeding impairs one's stock, but I don't believe that is so if you breed from the strongest of your birds. But I think they are more apt to catch any disease and trouble that is about, as their blood is much purer. I think that where you buy a winner with which to improve your stock you have a much better chance with a bird that you have bred yourself, and know what you have bred it from for a few years, than you have in buying a partner of equal merit to mate with it. I think you have a greater chance then. Mr. House, in his "Manual," recommends it. He says: "weakens the constitution; breeds disease; and a fore-runner of all ills? I do not believe it. Abuse of any of the luxuries of life is bad; so it is in inbreeding; it is quite correct and proper, and leads to success. But its abuse leads to the same thing." Mr. House's mode of breeding is mother to son most like the father, and father to daughter most like the mother. One of the most successful breeders I know breeds in that fashion, while other declare for brother and sister. I prefer cousins. So much for that.

Mr. Spillman, in his "Climbing the Norwich Plainhead tree," in breeding for head properties selects a pair of those that excel in head properties, and mates two of the best hens back to their father, while a couple of young cocks could be mated back to their cousins. It is the blood that tells. It can't be said that like produces like; on the other hand, when a system is adopted which is crowned with success it is certain that winners will crop up when least expected from those bred right. Mr. Boughton says, in some advice to the novice, "go to the man that breeds his own winners; buy both cock and hen from the same room Line breeding or inbreeding, while useful to the experienced, was not recommended to the novice. Much more could be said about the advantages gained by inbreeding, and the disadvantages of the same, but this I will say, you have a far better chance of improving your stock by it than by buying unrelated birds to cross with one another.

DUNFERMLINE AND DIS. C.B.S.

Meeting held Co-operative Hall, Mar. 30, Mr. J. Rankine presiding. The country members' absence was accounted for no doubt by the curtailment of the railway service. Previous to the business meeting a judging competition was held. The birds put up for competition were model's cut out from the Fancy Press. These were mounted into classes, and the task set the members was to select the three best birds in each, and the awards which conformed to the specimens of Mr. Wm. Cullen, who acted as referee, were awarded the places. The winner was our president (Mr. J. Rankine), who for the second year has taken the premier place in this competition. Second place was secured by Mr. Howie, who this year fairly redeemed himself on his previous trials. Third place was taken by Mr. A. Bowman, the secretary. Over and above the competition, Mr. Cullen had forwarded a fine display of models for exhibition, which fairly took the eye, and reflected great credit on Mr. Cullen. Two new members were admitted, namely Messrs. A. Burt (Townhill)—the secretary of Townhill O.S.—and J. Morrison. Reports of West Fife League meeting were given, and adopted. Members are requested to keep April 27 clear (date of next meeting), when Mr. J. Rankine has agreed to give a lecture. The subject will be announced later. A treat is in store. We are sure the president has had a wide and varied experience in the hobby, and is sure to do his subject justice. Votes of thanks to the chairman and Mr. Cullen brought the meeting to a close.—R. T. Campbell, Sec.

BANKFOOT AND DIST. C.B.S.

Meeting held March 19th, Mr. H. B. Wood (president) in chair. Decided, to have a snack night and social evening on April 16th, this being the close of our winter syllabus. Several interesting subjects have been dealt with during the past winter months, and it is the intention of the members to repeat these gatherings every three weeks during next winter. In connection with our shows we have secured the services of six of Yorkshire's most popular judges. As was the case last year, there is every promise of a glut of "specials" for each show, in addition to the annual "specials list." In selecting Mr. H. B. Wood as president, the society could not have made a better move. No grass will be allowed to grow under the feet of any of the officials with this gentleman at their head. Several members have reaped a harvest of specials through our president's past generosity. He announced that he will immediately present the society with a solid silver cup for competition amongst members. The subs. is only 3s. per year, and it is quite easy to take away from any of the members' shows a special of this value. Headquarters are at the Red Lion Hotel. Fanciers desirous of joining need not be afraid of any of the specials being "cornered" by the "big guns" of the Fancy. Several of our last show season's visitors have joined. The silver cup mentioned above will be on view and also competed for at our F.F. show on June 1st; the remaining shows will be held on June 22nd, August 3rd, October 26th, November 30th, and December 28th. The classifications for these were slightly altered; the clears and ticks are to be shown together, and Cinnamons by themselves. The following gentlemen were made members: Messrs. W. Ormondroyd, F. Carter, C. Hardaker, and E. Self. Fanciers, along with their wives and friends, will receive a hearty welcome to the snack and social evening April 16th, admission 6d. each. Will members who were unable to be present kindly make a note? A special room will be at our disposal, and it is hoped every member will be present.—F. Golder, Sec.

SUNDERLAND C.B.A.

Meeting held Mar. 30, Mr. Farrer in chair. Messrs. J. Stanger and J. Maddison were elected to judge open show on Jan. 17 and 18. Decided to hold F.F. Show July 13th. Mr. J. Rischorough will give silver medal for best bird shown by a novice. Mr. J. Miller was made a member.—J. Jeffery, sec.

NEWCASTLE C.B.S.

Meeting held April 4, 7.30, 65, Grainger Street, Mr. R. Tindale in chair. Following gentlemen elected members:—Messrs. W. Stephenson, R. Christer, A. Montgomery, and G. Greenwell, all of Wallsend. Following recommendations of committee confirmed: Cambridge Drill Hall, Northumberland Road, for open show, Oct. 18 and 19; social, Dec. 18, Co-operative Hall; picnic, May 27, Whit Monday; Crosby's Cafe, Northumberland Street, for Nest Feather show, June 22. There will be 33 classes for Nest Feather show (same as last year); also a judge for each section, names of selected judges to be announced shortly. Decided, to hold our picnic at Bothal Woods, same place as two years ago. Mr. Gill, of Museum, will give a lecture next meeting, time and place to be announced later. Mr. Petterson asked which is best—Norwich or Yorkshire with British bird for mules purposes? Mr. Maddison: Norwich; you get better colour, shape, and quality of feather on account of a large quantity of green blood. Mr. Maddison answered several questions in reference to breeding clear Mules, and also inbreeding of Canaries to produce light Mules. I would like to call members' attention to Rule 6. Members must pay their subscriptions by the next meeting. No member shall receive any benefit from the society until their subs. has been paid, unless from any worthy cause.—J. W. Reed, Sec.

NORTHERN B.B.M. AND F.B.C.

Annual meeting held Mar. 20, at Lockhart's, 65, Grainger Street, Newcastle-on-Tyne. Secretary's report for past year read and considered very satisfactory by all. There was a small balance in hand to carry forward. Election of officers:—President, W. J. Taylor, Esq.; vice-presidents, Messrs. H. B. Wilson, J. Shepherd, A. Storey, J. Currah, J. Harris, Dr. O'Niell, T. C. Crawhall, G. Davidson, W. Nicholson, J. T. Porteus, T. Rohson; chairman, Mr. C. J. Petterson; vice-chairman, Mr. J. McKenzie; committee, all members; auditors, Messrs. A. C. Young, J. Scott. Cup winners: British, W. Tomlinson (Chopwell); Mules, J. Maddison (Newcastle); for., J. McKenzie (Gateshead); medals: British, W. Tomlinson (two), Geo. Taylor (two), C. Waters (two); Mules, J. Maddison (two), F. Sokell (two), C. J. Petterson (one); foreign, J. McKenzie (two), A. C. Young (two), Christer (one), J. Scott (one). Any members who have won medals and could not attend, will have them sent on. As Messrs. J. Maddison and J. McKenzie have won their respective cups three times in all, these cups become their property. At this meeting a small but successful table show was held. Principal winners: Messrs. J. Scott, J. Bertram, C. J. Petterson. Mr. A. Storey judged. Next meeting April 24, 8 p.m., when all applications for patronage will be considered. Will secretaries please note?—Geo. Taylor, Sec.

GLASGOW (Queen's Park) C.B.S.

Meeting held Marie Stuart Halls, Crosshills, March 27th, Mr. A. Hunter presiding over a well-attended meeting. Annual club show now definitely fixed for Dec. 7th, in the Victoria Rooms, Victoria-road, Crosshill; Mr. A. Challenger (Kirkintilloch) to judge Norwich and Mr. C. C. Cophell (Glasgow) all other varieties. Chairman mentioned that at next meeting all particulars for the F.F. show would be brought forward, and hoped a similar attendance would be seen. The membership is always increasing, no fewer than seven new members coming forward this year. Others welcome and all particulars given by secretary (27, McLennan-street, Mount Florida). It has been arranged to pay prize money this year at the annual club show. Remainder of evening was taken up by Mr. J. Young (Rutherglen), in giving a discourse on Crest and Crest-bred breeding, etc. The attention of those present was attracted greatly by Mr. Young's remarks, which proved very instructive, although all present were not Crest breeders. He fully explained everything necessary from the period of pairing up until the top of the ladder on the show bench was reached, and at the conclusion of Mr. Young's lecture the president spoke highly in favour of his discourse. Mr. Young was accorded a hearty vote of thanks. Questions were asked and ably answered by him. This brought a most successful meeting to a close. Next meeting 24th April, Marie Stuart Halls, 8 p.m. —R. Heggie, Sec.

A Washing Exhibition; and Some Questions on Norwich P.H. Breeding.

There was a very large turn-out of members and visitors in the Arcade Hotel on March 27th to witness a washing exhibition by Mr. W. Grewar (Lochgelly), late of Forfar. Mr. J. C. Murray (president) welcomed the visitors, and introduced Mr. Grewar as one of the foremost Norwich breeders in Scotland. Mr. Grewar explained the idea of his drying cage, which was fitted with a hot-water tank with flannel over it; he also showed how the bird should be held in the hand, and how to turn it. He washed two birds, carefully explaining his method as he went. Mr. Grewar was very careful in the drying of the birds, using finally a silk handkerchief which drew out the moisture from the feathers; after which he placed them in the drying cage. An opportunity was given to any member to wash the remaining bird. Mr. A. Cunningham volunteered. Mr. Grewar instructed him as he proceeded. In a very short space of time the birds were run into an open wire cage and handed round for inspection. Mr. Grewar was closely followed during the exhibition by all. Questions being invited, Mr. Beveridge asked what advantage the tank drying cage had over the ordinary method? Mr. Grewar explained that the tank gave off a moist heat, which kept the feather in better condition, also that the birds were quicker drying. What advantage has this method over wrapping the birds up in cloth? Ans.: As he took great pains to take as much water off as possible with the handkerchiefs, he did not consider it necessary to wrap them up. Q.: Did he give the birds a bath or a spray next day? Ans.: He hung on the bath, which he preferred to the spray. Q.: How long before the show would you wash a bird? Ans.: At least four days before the show, although a week was better. He did not believe in washing a bird too often during the season, but, of course, if a bird was dirty it had to be washed to stand any chance. He always used sand for the cage bottoms; still, he did not doubt that sawdust would be cleanest, as it was more absorbant. You must, however, always use a certain amount of sand or grit as an aid to digestion. He believed that the water for washing a bird in should be warmed up, and not boiled first and then cooled down. He used Buttermilk soap, but was no faddist in this matter; any good white soap would do. After the birds returned from a show he found the bath very beneficial and invigorating.

Questions on the Norwich Plainhead were next invited, and again the heckling was very keen. He believed in breeding from two buffs if it were done judiciously, and with a definite object in view. One of the best birds he ever showed was bred that way. He had never tried breeding double yellow, but believed you would get a leveller colour, and certainly more yellows in the offspring that way. In breeding for colour it was immaterial whether you used yellow or buff cock, but to get colour you must have green blood in your stock. He preferred a whole green or a heavily variegated bird for that purpose. He would have no hesitation in introducing Cinnamons into a strain as a means of improving the feather. For a stock hen he liked a small typical hen provided it was bred from large birds, but size, he explained, was a good fault. Asked if he would introduce a Crest-bred for the purpose of improving size, he said he thought that would be the last resort as the Crest blood would turn up at any time in the stock. He believed in Sib.-breeding if you knew your stock, but he cautioned those present to be careful in that direction, as experience was needed. As a cure for colds he used equal parts of ipecacuanha wine, oxymel of squills, and glycerine, adding 30 drops of the mixture to two tablespoonfuls of water. Many other questions were asked on general breeding, and all satisfactorily answered.

Mr. J. C. Murray, at the conclusion, stated that the society was only young yet, but we had scored a decided success at our first open show, and explained that the committee and members were determined to improve on that last year's success. He invited all present to become members. Votes of thanks to Mr. Grewar and the chairman brought one of the best meetings we have held to a close. At next meeting in Ewan's "Fountain Bar" on the 17th April, judges will be nominated. Two new members were admitted, namely, Messrs. J. Jack and J. Bryson.—J. R. Reid, Sec.

STOKE-ON-TRENT C.B.A.

Meeting held April 1st at headquarters. There was a very good attendance, and much important business was transacted. Mr. A. E. Birch (Hanley) elected a member. Decided, to appoint Mr. H. W. Battye to judge annual open show November 14th. Following classification adopted for Y.B. show June 22nd: Nor. 4 classes, Yorks. 4, A.O.V. Can. 1, Mule or Hybrid 1, Old Mule 1, British 4, Adult Nor. 1, do. Yorks. 1. Points for cup count in all classes except adult Canaries. Also decided to have one Nor. and one Yorks. class, young birds, open to members of Stoke, Longton, Hanley, and Burslem C.B. Societies, with prize money 6s., 4s., and 2s., for 1s., entry fee. The entry fee in members' classes to be 6d. per cage, to be divided as prizes on sliding scale. An interesting discussion then took place on the use of marking rings. Several of the members present related their experiences of ringing birds, which appear to have been very unfortunate, quite a number young birds being lost through it. Others did not like to see birds shown with rings on, and considered it would make it more difficult for a judge to give satisfaction. Judging from the feeling of those who took part in the discussion there will be very few rings of any description used by the Stoke fanciers during the coming breeding season. Members please note: Mr. W. Bowyer will give a lecture on colour-feeding at the same meeting.—J. Pitchford, Sec.

GREEN CANARY ASSOCIATION.

The Annual General Meeting.

Annual general meeting held Oldham Hall, Liverpool, March 28th, Mr. J. W. Metcalfe in chair. Secretary reported he had not had the balance sheets printed as in former years, owing to the cost which was considered unnecessary seeing we had nothing in hand; it was read over in detail, and accepted. There are 75 fully-paid members, and four half-paid for 1911-12. Income, £19 5s. The nest feather show resulted in a loss of £1 0s. 5½d and 9s. 9d. was lost on the old show, in addition to which the committee allotted sums of 17s. and 5s. 7d. special prize money respectively. Six gold medals, costing £1 1s. each, were provided out of the specials fund, also £2 10s. in cash for the runners-up in each section. Medals were exchange with the Toronto (Canada) Society at their request, but it might interest members to know that their's has not come to hand, neither has the secretary taken notice of a letter drawing his attention to this. Although we start the new year's work with a debit balance of £3 0s. 11d. I would like to mention that all accounts are paid, and shields have been put on all cups, as also a gold medal, provided for the last year's winner of the we are not at all badly off, and hope to have Yorkshire cup owing to its changing hands. Hence we are not at all badly off, and hope to have a trifle in hand at the end of the year. A notice of motion came forward to do away with the office of assistant-secretary, and combine the offices of secretary and treasurer. Carried unanimously. A notice of motion to discontinue annual nest feather show was carried, as also one to the effect that members must exhibit at fully 50 per cent. of the patronage shows to enable them to qualify for one of the season specials. Election of officers: Chairman, J. W. Metcalfe; vice-chairman, F. Hand; auditors, J. Walker and C. Hillmen; committee Walker, Rowlands, Abbott, Eccleston, Hill, Isaac, and McDermott; hon. sec. and treasurer Geo. Green, 26, Lord Nelson street, Liverpool. Mr. V. H. Deacon was nominated for president, and elected unanimously. He immediately offered a silver cigarette case, value £1 1s., to the member introducing most new members between now and the end of the season. Now is your chance; everything to gain, and nothing to lose. We offer cash, gold medals, and cash to the value of about £5 each year for a subs. of 5s. Novices are catered for separately from the champions in each section and each and every member has an equal chance. Join at once. Full particulars can be had on application to me.—Geo Green, Sec.

of priceless information. Such is the matter in "Nutshells" 25 and 26, which cover the whole of the groundwork so far as softbills are concerned. There are certain materials indispensable for the proper keeping of the more delicate of the insectivorous birds. What these are, "Nutshell" No. 25 tells you, and afterwards goes very fully into a very important subject—hand-rearing. The author, H. J. Fulljames, who is no "chicken" at the keeping of British birds, then describes all the favourite varieties in a delightfully clear and helpful manner, showing which best repay the care spent upon them. It is safe to say that everything that is anything is dealt with in one or the other of the booklets, and readers will not be long in picking up the hints. Notice! The breeding of mealworms is described and instructions as to the gathering of ants' eggs given. For the most complete instruction on British softbills, and the foods and appliances needful, if they are to be kept in perfect health, get "Nutshells" 25 and 26, post free, 5d. the two, from The Publisher, 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

so as to detect when any of your Rollers are going wrong. How can you detect anything wrong? You don't know? Well, you ought to, for your lack of knowledge will be disastrous to the singing powers of your birds. "Nutshell" No. 10 gives you this knowledge, and if you don't get it, it will be a case of "penny wise and pound foolish." Which bird promises to be good with hollow roll, bell-roll, bass-roll, and Roller? How do you cure a bird of noisiness? What are the best training methods and the best preparation for contest singing? For answers to these great questions in Roller Canarydom, and also full particulars as to correct keeping and breeding, get "Nutshell" No. 10, "The Roller Canary," 2½d. post free, from "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

A CHANCE FOR BEGINNERS

to solve all the intricacies connected with the breeding and exhibiting of Yorkshires Canaries is now offered at 1/1½ post free. "Yorkshire Canaries," by H. W. Baltye, illustrated by H. Norman, and A. J. Simpson, is a notable work. It is replete with all that is needful for the beginner, and is extremely valuable to old hands. The chapter on the selection of stock is alone worth the money, and there are 14 other chapters equally rich in valuable hints. See those on Breeding Cinnamon Marks; Crossing; Dressing or Faking; Dont's for Breeders. "Yorkshire Canaries," the unrivalled manual for breeders of Yorkshires, 1/1½ post free from "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C.

HENS! HENS! HENS!

The finest lot I have ever offered to the Fancy. They are real gems of extra good length, type, position, and quality of feathers. The wings are well braced to long tapering waists, and finished off with long, closely packed pipe tails. The birds have plenty of leg, and stand well up on the perch, displaying that breedy, swanky appearance, so much admired in a first-class Yorkshire. I have a few grand matched stock pairs, calculated to breed some real clinkers, also a few odd stock cocks possessing both length, substance, and quality, I can supply at prices to suit all pockets; approval, cash or deposit; stamp for particulars: W. H. Shackleton, Melrose Aviaries, Lytton-rd., Girlington, Bradford.

THE YORKSHIRE BREEDERS'

Winning Yorkshires.

Having now selected my breeding stock I find I have a few more pairs Yorkshires than I can find room for. I have decided to offer them to the first comers at the above very low prices.

These birds have been bred by me from my winners (which have secured firsts and specials at all the leading championship shows in the country, including Scottish National and Crystal Palace). They have been kept over with a view to breeding myself, and should produce youngsters able to hold their own in the best of company. This is a genuine opportunity for fanciers to introduce new blood (and that the finest in the country) into their bird rooms at a reasonable price. I have also a few grand lengthy birds at the following prices: Cocks, in full song, 6/-, 7/6, 8/6, 10/6, 12/6, 15/-, 20/- each. NOTICE! To those about to buy a Grey Parrot. There are many points to look for when making your purchase, ways of telling at a glance in what state of health the bird is. Though it is difficult to distinguish sex, there are means. The Grey Parrot is a delicate bird, and the feeding of a newly-imported specimen is therefore a matter of the utmost importance. Then, the Parrot acclimatised, care with its general diet is very needful; there are many foods which it will readily eat, but which must be rigidly avoided. With due care you can make a grand talker of a "Grey," and quickly, too, if you know how. What is a common mistake which Parrot lovers make? The answer to this question, and to every other concerning the keeping of this popular bird in health and condition will be found in "Nutshell" No. 17, "The Grey Parrot," by Wesley T. Page; post free 2½d., from the Publisher, 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C.

WAXBILLS. WAXBILLS.

Golden-breasted, Orange-cheeked, Grey and St. Helena Waxbills, favourites with foreign bird-keepers. One cannot fully describe the beauty of these little birds, which make a pretty spectacle disporting themselves in the aviary among the green plant life. They thrive best in an aviary, and this is easily and cheaply made if you follow the directions given by Wesley T. Page, in "Nutshell" No. 20, along with all the other hints necessary, if you would be successful in keeping and breeding these lively and vivacious pets; post free 2½d., from the Publisher, 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C.

CHEAP, CHARMING FOREIGNERS.

Such, in short, are Budgerigars, which are among the most beautiful and lively of man's feathered pets. The breeding of "Budgies" is a work of patience, but, owing to the possibilities in the production of varieties, it is very profitable. Difficulties there are in the way, many and serious, but they can be overcome. Food, and the construction of cage and aviary are very important items. Full particulars as to proper feeding, caging and management in captivity, with hints on sexing, breeding, moulting and exhibiting will be found in "Nutshell" No. 18, "The Budgerigar," post free 2½, from CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C.

Not an Ideal Nesting Site.

A pair of Blackbirds have built on the top of an old wall surrounding a garden in a Surrey village. The nest is a large structure, the ivy growing on the wall being used as part of the foundation. It is quite exposed to all weather, and will probably be robbed of its contents later on by some prowling cat. In this same old wall are many sheltered nooks that would make much better sites for a nest.

Migrants' Winter Quarters.

A few of the migrants' places of winter residence are indicated by a writer in the "Millgate Monthly":—The Ringousel, familiar in moorland localities, goes to Northern and Central Africa or Asia Minor; the Wheatear to Western and Northern Africa, to Persia and Northern India; the Chiff-chaff to the shores of the Mediterranean; the Yellow Wagtail, the Nightingale, Red-backed Shrike, Garden Warbler, Reed Warbler, Wood Warbler, Swift, Spotted Flycatcher, March Warbler, and Nightjar all go to Africa, and the last named also betakes itself to India. The Wryneck favours China, and Northern Africa; the Cuckoo Central Africa and Southern India; the Tree Pipit Africa, Persia, and India; the Lesser Whitethroat, Africa; the Greater Whitethroat, South Africa; the Willow Warbler, Africa and Nubia; the Sand Martin, India and Africa; the Swallow, Ethiopia and India; and the House Martin, South Abyssinia.

Hard Times in Winter.

Last winter was a bad one for soft-billed birds, says a writer in the 'atsI'll trueirZ?yc birds, says a writer in the "Illustrated Sporting and Dramatic News," because the berry crop was in many districts a complete failure. There were no fruit at all upon the hollies, and the hips and haws and garden ash were very few and far between. Sparrows always manage to get a living, no matter how severe may be the weather. But frost spells starvation to all insectivorous and fruit-eating birds, and it does not require a very long spell of hard weather to kill them off. By scratching about in the bottoms of hedgerows, these birds manage to find a few insects, but this supply is soon exhausted. Thrushes and Blackbirds suffer most when the ground is frozen hard, but Redwings are the first to die from starvation. This is the more remarkable because they are winter migrants to our shores, and come to us from the northern parts of Europe. It is not the cold that kijlls, but it is the want of food. Curiously enough, Tits, Wrens, and Hedge Sparrows manage better during the severe frosts than do many of the larger and stronger birds. These busy little feathered mites hunt all the cracks and crannies wherein insects have deposited their eggs, and thus find sufficient food to sustain life. They also sleep together in holes and hollow branches, and thus help to keep each other warm

Sauce for the Goose.

The lady was attired in the height of fashion—dressed to kill, in fact—and she strutted majestically through the main street of the village of Wurzleton. Suddenly her eye became fixed upon a small boy, and she bristled with anger. The boy was bare-legged and shabby, and in his hand he shamelessly carried a bird's nest full of little brown eggs. "You're a bad, wicked boy!" snapped the lady, without the slightest preliminary introduction. "How could you rob the nest?" she continued. "No doubt the poor mother is even now grieving for the loss of her eggs." "Not she, mum!" came the cheeky reply; "She's part of your hat!" Then the fashion-plate proceeded rather faster on her weary way.—Sent in by Mr. T. G. Podmore.

The Canary Breeder's Most Difficult Problem.

A lecture delivered by Mr. Geoff. Benson (Chairman of the Wallasey C.B.S.) before the Anfield, Everton and Dist. C.B.S. on March 11th.

Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen,—I have very great pleasure in addressing a few remarks on the most difficult problem the Fancy in general and novices in particular have to contend with, namely, the pairing up of birds. I am agreeably surprised to see that such a large and enthusiastic body of fanciers should do me the honour of coming here to meet me and listen to my remarks. I will do my best to repay you for your attendance.

Buying the Birds.

To commence, it is very essential that you should select the very best birds you can, and as early as possible, in order that your stock shall become quite acclimatised to your rooms. In buying, I strongly advise any fancier—and particularly novices—to buy the birds from the best strains possible. Always make sure you buy and select birds with a pedigree. I am a strong believer in pedigree breeding; face value I never rely on.

Having selected your stock, feed them during the winter months on a staple diet of three parts Canary and one part good sound rape. By feeding in this way you will bring your birds into full vigour about the middle of March, which, I maintain, is quite early enough; and for this reason; if you pair up before then you have the long, dark nights and cold, with an occasional sharp frost, to contend with. I maintain that for young birds a week or so old to go without food from, say, 6 p.m. to 7 a.m. the next morning is only courting disaster and disappointment, thereby throwing your first round entirely away. The end of March is quite early enough to pair up. Then by the time you have your young birds hatched out the nights are shorter, the weather is getting warmer, and you have a far better chance of rearing your first young.

Treatment Prior to Pairing.

I believe in keeping my birds in nice roomy cages, always clean. Let your hens run in good, roomy flight cages. Give them plenty of exercise, at the first week in March plenty of gritty sand, oyster shell, and cuttle fish, and throw a little inga seed in the cages for them to pick at, as by doing so you will seldom be troubled with egg binding.

Keep your cock birds in single cages; they will come on into full vigorous song quite naturally; do not force them, but continue to feed liberally, with a little egg food once a week.

I believe you get the best birds from a buff cock and a yellow hen. I consider ten per cent. of the Cinnamon blood introduced on the hen's side is very beneficial. You can then expect to breed young with that beautiful short, soft texture of feather so much required. Introduce size, length, and leg on the cock's side, and quality, type, feather, and position on the hen's side. Never double-buff or double-yellow unless you have had a few years' experience in breeding birds for exhibition. You will seldom, if ever, breed winners from winners. Better to pair up birds that have size and quality. If your cock bird has a nice head, a good full back, and plenty of leg and length, make sure you put with him a hen who has a nice head, full neck, clean rounded breast, straight, upright carriage, nicely tapered off waist. You will then have a far better chance of breeding winners than by pairing two birds with points alike.

Always make sure that your buffs in Yorkshires—either cock or hen—have good full necks. Yellows invariably fail in the neck. Always give your birds a liberal supply of dandelion or a little apple.

When your hen has laid one egg, take it away and substitute a dummy one. Do the same with each egg laid till she has laid three eggs. Place the three eggs back in the nest. This should be done to ensure all your young ones hatching out in one day. Each young one has then the same strength as the others, and can be reared in the nest, getting an equal share of the egg food from the hen.

Should you desire to breed for marks, you will have more satisfactory results by introducing the marks on the hen's side.

Breeding Green Yorkshires.

In breeding Green Yorkshires, I like a little Cinnamon blood in the hen. This is how I get colour, fine feather, and strong markings. The finest show specimens of the Yorkshire Greens are bred in this way. Should you breed a Cinnamon from two Greens, that is what is called a sport; and should that sport turn out a hen, she will do you some good. But if it is a cock, you will not breed anything that will win. In every case Cinnamon blood must be introduced on the hen's side in breeding Greens.

It will give me great pleasure to come amongst you again, and as you have called upon me to judge your nest feather show, I hope you will give me plenty to do. Should any gentleman like to ask me any question, I will answer him to the best of my ability.

Questions and Answers.

Mr. Holden: What is your special reason for introducing Cinnamon blood into Greens, and is it liable to produce young with bronzy feather?—Answer: By introducing 10 per cent. of Cinnamon blood on the hen's side, you are sure to have a very fine silky texture of feather, good sound body colour and strong markings. Bronzy feathers leave the bird at its first moult.

Mr. Bell: What do you consider the best way of feeding young in the nest?—Spratt's ovals, crushed, hard-boiled eggs, whole hemp, and soaked rape. A piece of sulphate of soda in the water keeps your hens cool and hungry, and makes them do their duty to the young. You will rear more young this way than any.

Mr. R. Atherton proposed a vote of thanks to the lecturer. Mr. L. Hamilton seconded, and in doing so said it had given him great pleasure to listen to Mr. Benson, and he was sure the fifty odd members present would go away with pleasant recollections at having listened to a most instructive lecture, and he was sure it would do the members a lot of good.—Mr. Benson responded with the remark that he hoped he would have the pleasure of judging some Palace winners at the nest feather show on July 15.—R. Canary Keeping and Breeding.

A lecture delivered by Mr. Jenkins before the Widnes and District C.B.S. on March 7th.

Mr. Chairman, Ladies, and Gentlemen: As a body of fanciers, we have thought it advisable to vary the order of things from time to time, so that if possible we may create first a desire in the minds of the novice, and then, as far as we are able, to instruct them in the way to go about whatever Fancy they begin in; although a novice, in carrying out the instructions given him, will often do much better than the man of experience who first gave him his instructions. I speak only in respect of breeding birds in numbers.

Not the Cheapest, but the Best.

When quite a lad I remember asking a man how he fed his Canaries from the nest, and with what kind of food. He replied: "Egg and bread, and watercress." And after twenty-five years' experience I do not think there is anything better, providing, of course, it is given fresh and often. It may not be the cheapest way, but it is as good as any, if not the very best. In this way I at first reared thirty-nine young Canaries in three years from one pair of birds—two lots of seventeen and one of five. Other fanciers of long standing will tell you the same story.

Bird-keeping, I think, compares favourably with any pursuit of pleasure; and with care and judgment it can be made a paying hobby. The hobby is within the reach of all sorts and conditions of men—and even women and children. This, I think, points to the fact that patience is an essential factor in the composition of every bird breeder. Most fanciers of long standing started with common Canaries, and, having bred them freely, pressed on to better things. Those people who enter the ranks of bird breeders at the top have their place, and they probably benefit the Fancy while they are passing through; but I am afraid it is often a case of "soon ripe, soon rotten." But I presume that all sorts go to make an agreeable whole, and the Fancy is so esteemed as to embrace all. For my own part, I do not remember when I did not take a keen and lively interest in things appertaining to bird life; the love was inherent, I think; certainly it has not lain dormant, and has seldom abated in strength. This is because the hobby is such a charming one. There is the mating of the birds, the rearing of the young, their development, and the exhibiting of the birds at show time; these follow each other in sweet succession and make the Fancy very enjoyable.

The Bird that "Cake Walks!"

Coming to the birds themselves, there are only two varieties which cannot be improved by being crossed with other varieties—the Belgian and the Lizard. The Belgian in this respect is like the racehorse—it has wonderful plastic or form-giving qualities if used with great care and judgment. The up-to-date Scotch Fancy Canary is said by some to be three-parts Belgian; others say there is nine-tenths of the Belgian in its composition. The Belgian is said also to give the finishing touch to the high-class Yorkshire Canary—the bird that takes the top perch and does the "cake-walk" until he catches the judge's eye, which, I think you will allow, is a great advantage to any bird, as well as a source of profit and pleasure to its owner.

I do not know much about, and my experience is not extensive enough to enable me to make any definite statement upon, the form-giving qualities of the Lizard Canary when grafted on to other varieties, so to speak. Some people think that the old London Fancy Canary sprang from this source, which may possibly be true.

Advantages of Giving and Taking.

Coming, however, to other varieties, the case is different. Here we borrow and lend, give and take until we attain the goal of our ambitions, and if we by any means get the bird which meets the necessary requirements and which wins in its class as a distinct breed, people seldom if ever enquire about its pedigree or how it was compounded; they generally enquire the price of it or of some of the stock. In this way the use of the Lancashire Canary in Crest-breeding has benefitted the latter variety, and has been the means of bringing it to its present state (when in capable hands, of course). The Lancashire in turn, I believe, borrowed from the Crest and benefitted by the change, as the St. Bernard dog is said to do by a touch of the bloodhound cross. Although these things on the surface and at first sight appear to be disastrous and most ridiculous, yet if done at the right time, very carefully sticking to the object one has in view, your success in the distance is assured. If successes were gained without continued effort, I am afraid they would lose most of their charm. There is much pleasure in the pursuit of one's object, and the reward is in the doing, as well as in the possession of one's desires.

An Exception to Every Rule.

Norwich and Cinnamon Canaries have derived their immense size by having something fresh put into the established order of things. Here a peculiar thought crosses my mind—if we follow the advice of the experienced we are right generally, but there is an exception to every rule. The progress of science is said to consist in the correction of errors, questioning of received opinions, etc. We sometimes make little of, and even denounce, the very thing we do, probably because it is felt, with advantage to ourselves, to follow the advice of experience. This is right in the main; but to turn aside to investigate, or even to do a little pedalling on one's own account, is very beneficial at times. People, you know, have made vast fortunes out of things regarded once as "waste" that was beneath the notice even of the leading scientists of the day. Fanciers with thought and care have struck oil in a similar way. The fertile mind, the keen imagination, and the touch of the master hand have their place in the Fancy of to-day. You will at once see, I think, that I am only making suggestions here; and giving hints instead of citing instances, as I did at first. I am leaving the present company an opening here for that purpose. Surely some of us have had a little experience that is worth mentioning for the benefit of others?

By way of conclusion, I may say that in mating to produce good birds there is, I believe, no hard and fast rule. Some favour a very large cock bird and a medium-sized hen with good shape and quality. Some pair their best in the belief that "like will produce like." Some study the law of civilization, pairing them in direct opposition. Some put their trust in pedigree. Others, again, have been known to produce good birds from a small cock bird and a large feathery hen. Some pin their faith to breeding, and some to careful selection. But to breed a good bird that will win against every other competitor who has pitted his best against yours is something to be proud of, especially in these days of keen competition.

The Little Owl Barred

The Hunts County Council forwarded a petition to the Home Secretary to remove the Little Owl from the list of protected birds for Hunts, and we are given to understand that the Home Secretary has agreed to do so. This Owl, which is a very prolific breeder, is now very numerous in Huntingdonshire, also Northamptonshire.

The Latest "Humanitarian" Effusion —A Reply.

Last week I referred to the epistle of a writer who had chosen to hash up some of the misstatements which have already been more than once published in various "humanitarian" pamphlets and magazine articles, and had sent the resurrected hysterics in the form of a letter to the editors of several provincial newspapers. At the time I thought it unnecessary to make any reply other than the short reference in these columns. I have since found that the effusion in question has been published in places as widely apart as Glasgow, Belfast and London, so I thought it as well to write to the editors of the various papers in which the communication had appeared. My letter is reproduced below.

The Destruction and Captivity of Wild Birds.

Sir,—May I beg the privilege of a little of your space to reply to the letter of "Drew Birch," which appeared in your issue of 2nd inst.?

Your correspondent states that "it is legal in England not only to trap and sell birds, but also to inflict great cruelty upon them." In point of fact, the trapping of English wild birds is legal only for a few months in the year, and in some localities certain birds are protected throughout the whole of the year. As for its being legal to "inflict great cruelty upon them," the absurdity of such a statement obviates the necessity of a reply.

When caught, your correspondent says, wild birds are subjected "to slow mental and physical torture till death rescues them." By whom, and why? The owner of a caged bird would have no reason to submit it to physical torture. His object is to cater for its wants, and render the bird happy in its captivity. There are thousands upon thousands of cage and aviary birds in our country kept in far better circumstances than are the portion of birds in their native freedom. I could tell of unlimited cases in which birds have refused to accept liberty after having learned the comforts of shelter and food in captivity. The cruelties of "Mother Nature" are notorious. Birds are destroyed in myriads annually by "natural" happenings—devoured by their "natural" enemies, drowned in their nests by rain from Heaven, starved in their thousands during frosty weather, and annihilated in their millions by storms and other perils incidental to migration. In fact, it would be easy to prove that ninety per cent. of them succumb yearly through one or the other of these "natural" happenings. As for the "mental torture," does "Drew Birch" contend that a bird has the power of retrogressive reflection and anticipatory thought? I could prove to him that in a very few days a bird forgets entirely that it was ever in possession of natural freedom. If it could remember it, it would be more than ever satisfied that it had changed its lot for a better.

Now let us take the statement "about 80 per cent. of them die within a few days from sheer mental anguish, and ill-treatment." The "mental anguish and ill-treatment," I think, I have disposed of in the above remarks. But do 80 per cent. of them die within a few days for any reason whatever? Certainly not. Your correspondent's authority, or rather the authority of those from whom he has borrowed the statement, is the warning of an experienced bird-keeper not to catch or buy immature Goldfinches—birds that are too young to assimilate other food than the half-ripe and sodden wild seeds they could obtain while free. To distort this special warning into a general statement is to resort to chicanery.

The comparison of the feelings of a well-kept bird with those of a human being sentenced to imprisonment for life is so utterly ridiculous as to need no consideration.

I have pleasure in enclosing for the favour of your perusal an extended reply written by myself in reviewing a pamphlet entitled "The other side of the Bars" published some time ago by the Humanitarian League, which pamphlet has been obviously used by your correspondent as a text book. I beg that you will kindly give the same prominence to this letter as was afforded to the communication of "Drew Birch," and you are, of course, at liberty to make any use you please of the leaflet enclosed. I shall be very pleased to send a copy to any of your readers who may wish to see it.

Another Society Joins in Force.

Members will be interested to see from the report published in another column of the recent meeting of the Attercliffe and Dist. C.B.S., that after Mr. Watson, the local Hon. Sec. of CAGE BIRDS LEAGUE, had explained some of our Aims and Objects, some fourteen members of the Society at once joined the LEAGUE. This is just an example of what our local hon. secs. can do in the furtherance of our organisation, the urgent need of which is becoming daily more and more apparent. Our medal scheme, at which I hinted last week, is nearing fruition, and in the forthcoming show season medals will be granted for competition at the show of every society whose members are also members of CAGE BIRDS LEAGUE. The value and number of the medals offered will entirely depend upon the membership of the Society to the League, and the competitions will be restricted to members of CAGE BIRDS LEAGUE only. Full particulars will be announced as quickly as possible, and Secretaries and Societies will be benefiting both the LEAGUE and their own annual show by bringing the knowledge of our medal scheme to the notice of their members at their monthly meeting. Many towns yet remain unrepresented by a local hon. sec. to CAGE BIRDS LEAGUE, and I shall be pleased to hear from any member willing to accept office for his town and district.

The Stapleton Fund.

In these columns of our issue of 6th inst. I called attention to the hardships which had been inflicted upon our member, Mr. Stapleton, who, although he had triumphantly refuted the accusations brought against him by the officials of the R.S.P.C.A., found himself, in consequence, in the position of having to pay more than £8 in costs, over and above the five guineas which the Society had been ordered by the magistrates to pay towards the costs of the action they had so conspicuously failed to substantiate. I hoped that members would assist Mr. Stapleton in his difficulty, but the response to my appeal has not been nearly so generous as I expected. The list will be closed on Tuesday, 23rd inst., and any amounts received up to that date will be added to the small sum in hand and forwarded to Mr. Stapleton.

Separating the Breeding Cages.

For several years I used to place a strip of wood between my breeding cages, and I always found, upon removing the cages, that the said strips appeared a regular lurking and breeding place for red-mite. Last year I went to a grindery shop and purchased some of the spikes used in the bottom of cricket shoes, and knocked one into each corner of the bottoms of the cages, outside, about an inch from the edges. They only cost me twopence per dozen, and a dozen will do three double breeders. The cages thus stood upon four feet, and I was not troubled with red mite there again. The points of the spikes also keep the cages from slipping.—H. J. Lake (22a, Dillwyn St. West, Ipswich).

A Necessity in Hybridising.

Bullie hens and others are often guilty of eating or destroying their eggs. A simple safeguard is to cut a hole in the bottom of the nest large enough to let the egg, when laid, pass through into a small bag sewn to the bottom, lined with cotton or soft material, to save it from being broken. The felt nest is left free from building material, so that the egg rolls freely into the bag. The egg may then be removed for setting under a reliable Canary hen.—G. Hillier (2, Park View, off Brown Street, Paisley).

When Breeding in Aviaries.

Those who try hybridising or foreign bird breeding in aviaries can look into nests without disturbing them, particularly those situated in bushes, logs, boxes, etc., by holding a small hand mirror (one quite good enough for the purpose can be got for a penny) directly over the nesting aperture. Hold it at an angle slanting away from yourself, and you can see the contents fine.—A. G. Lewis (Homedale, Hall Wood Road, Kettering).

Useful for Foreign Birds.

Keepers of small foreign Finches, Waxbills, etc., will find a pinch two or three times a week of ordinary lawn seed greatly relished by the birds and a beneficial change from the everlasting plain canary and millet.—Miss A. C. Townend (Nelson Lodge, Nelson Road, Bognor).

Quarrels in Breeding Canaries.

Fanciers who let their birds breed in an aviary, flying loose, often get troubled with quarrels over the nesting places, and ofttimes two hens will lay in the same nest. If you will hang another nest pan at the side of the one they have laid eggs in, and take half the eggs and put them into this nest, you will find that the trouble is at an end. I have tried this method now for years, and have always found it a success.—H. Holloway (Lye, Stourbridge).

Of Course!

Never be without CAGE BIRDS if you want to know anything in the birdie line.—E. Horne (Herne Bay).

A Use for Spring Cabbage.

When rearing young Canaries, egg food is mostly given to feed with. The birds get tired of it and want a change. Get the prime bit out of the heart of a spring cabbage, chop very fine, and mix with the egg food. This the birds will relish, and it will help to rear good strong young.—G. W. Briggs (Heanor).

Keeping Dandelion Leaves Fresh.

When one lives in the town and cannot pick fresh leaves every day, take an occasional walk out in the country and pick several large roots of dandelion and place them in a shallow dish or plate of water. They will keep quite a week, and you will have a fresh lot of leaves every day for your birds.—Miss W. Turner (Hereford).

Mating One Cock With Two Hens.

When it is intended to mate one cock with two hens, it is usual to provide a double-compartment cage, which should not be less than 36 inches long, and be fitted with a sliding wooden partition in the centre, so that when one hen has laid, the cock may be run in with the second hen by drawing out the slide and letting him through, thus avoiding any disturbance. This kind of cage is also useful even for a single pair, because it sometimes happens that the birds fight very much when first put together, and occasionally the cock cannot be trusted to leave the hen alone while she is sitting, and at other times, when she is more likely to rear the young without his assistance.—A. W. Fullwood, Wolverhampton.

Purifying the Air in Birdrooms.

To keep the air in a bird room purified, get an ordinary bird sprayer. Fill this nearly full with water, put a teaspoonful of a good disinfectant fluid into the water, then spray the bird room once or twice a day with it.—F. Maund (Bristol).

When Handling Birds.

Bird-keepers should not forget that the bony structure of a young bird is very frail, and in handling, no undue pressure should be used. Many birds injure themselves on the skull by dashing about the cage, and when, after a few weeks, they die, the owner generally heaps the blame on some kind of food. It is better when catching a bird to remove all perches and thus lessen the obstacles, in case the bird is startled. Birds should not be disturbed at night, for they are apt to receive severe injuries by flying upwards; you can imagine how you would feel yourself being suddenly stopped by a wall or beam when making a mad dash for freedom in the dark.—J. J. Boardman (Tyldesley).

To Keep Out Mice.

Readers who are troubled with mice in the bird room should obtain ordinary fire-lighters and place near the holes from which the mice come. This will effectively keep the mice away, and at the same time "disinfect" the room, but cause no harm to the birds.—R. R. Forster (Norwich).

Will members of the North Wales C.B.S. kindly note that I have been elected hon. treasurer for 1912 and 1913, and that all cheques, postal and money orders are to be made payable to the hon. treasurer, and to be forwarded to the hon. sec., Mr. J. Wynne Parry, 18, Tithebarn Street, Carnarvon? We have decided on a members' show at the Assembly Room on Whit Monday, and have engaged Mr. A. G. Davis (Manchester) as judge. A Nest on a Ladder.

A venturesome Thrush has built its nest on the wood tread of a step-ladder, which stands against a wall, in the garden of ex-Detective Inspector Dew, at Perivale, near Ealing. The feathered parent appears content amid its novel surroundings. It was Inspector Dew, it will be remembered, who arrested "Dr." Crippen.

In the "Monkey-puzzle" Tree.

A rather strange incident has occurred in our kitchen garden. I was walking in the garden when I looked up at a monkey-puzzle tree, and there was a nest perched right on the top of a prickly branch, with the bird sitting on the top. Never before has a bird built a nest on a monkey-puzzle tree in our garden.—Sent by Joe J. Cooper (Killerby Hall, near Scarborough).

More White Canaries.

Allow me to thank you for the kind notice in your issue of April 6 of my White Canary in company of Dr. Galloway's. The sketch is highly creditable to your artist, Mr. H. Norman, to whom, as well as yourselves, my best thanks are due. So far as this season is concerned, I have been successful in again hatching several whites. I will advise you later as to my final results. With best wishes for the success of your valuable paper.—W. Kiesel (North London).

A "Saucy" Mother.

At North Lodge, St. Leonard's-on-Sea, writes Mr. Thos. Veness, on April 4, a gardener found a Thrush's nest with three young ones about three days old, in an euonymus tree. The hen was on the nest, and he went and got some worms, and she took them from his hands. Eight or nine workmen are doing repairs close to the nest, and last Saturday, the 13th, a carpenter went to have a look, and she only pecked his finger, and did not fly off. This is not a "fairy tale," as I can vouch for the accuracy of same.

Sulky, but Wins.

I was much pleased to see an excellent drawing of my Chough ("The King") on the front page of Cage Birds. He is an immense bird of wonderful lustre, and his beak and legs are very red. I believe he is the largest in England. His only drawback is that he is of a sulky disposition. His performances on the show bench this past season are:—1st Birmingham, 1st Wolverhampton, 1st Peterborough, 1st Stoke-on-Trent, 2nd Ludlow, 2nd Stratford-on-Avon (both times beaten by my own Waxwing), and 1st Crystal Palace. I wish Cage Birds all the success it so richly deserves.—P. Victor Williams (Market Drayton).

Mrs. Soames (Bromley) is recommending "CAGE BIRDS" to all friends, as she has been so successful through it, having received over 30 answers to her last advert. of one bird!

I have sold all the birds (with one exception) that I advertised in "CAGE BIRDS." Kindly thank all who wrote, as it would be a great expense for me to answer all through the post.—W. J. Morgan (Cardiff).

Please thank all who replied to my advert. concerning exchange Cockatoo and cage in "CAGE BIRDS" of February 24th, as I have had so many answers I cannot reply to them all. I have made the exchange satisfactorily through your valuable paper. "CAGE BIRDS" is THE best paper to advertise in.—Squire Clisby (Blackpool).

Kindly thank all who enquired for my Norwich Canaries advertised in "CAGE BIRDS." I had so many applications that really I could not answer them all through the post, which speaks well for "CAGE BIRDS'" circulation.—W. Dawson (Farnworth).

Thanks to your valuable paper, "CAGE BIRDS," my surplus of birds are all sold through the medium of my adverts. in your paper. — L. J. Richardson (Rotherhithe).

You will be glad to know that my adverts in "CAGE BIRDS" have been very successful. I had more applications than I could meet, and had to return money, having no more of the birds advertised, writes Mr. Savage, of Abingdon.

Please do not insert my advert. again in "CAGE BIRDS," as I have already sold all my birds, and had to return many postal orders.—J. A. Malley (Dumbarton).

"Will you please stop my advertisements, as I have completely cleared out, thanks to CAGE BIRDS," writes Samuel Dean (Great Horton).

I am unable to answer all enquiries for my Borders advertised in "CAGE BIRDS," as I had only a limited number to dispose of. Have had about two score of applications.—Harry Davidson (Lockerbie).

Kindly thank all who replied to my advert. in your paper "CAGE BIRDS" re Yorkshire hens; they are so numerous I cannot answer them all. This shows the good results of advertising in "CAGE BIRDS." I may say I have been suited locally. I wish "C.B." the success it so much deserves.—Wm. J. Baker (Norwich).

I must say "CAGE BIRDS" is a champion paper for advertising in. I always have an enormous number of applications when I advertise. I wish your paper every success; I would not be without it.—A. Hasler (Rainham, Essex).

Blackbird's Queer Perch.

A Blackbird flitted about Coalville Parish Church on Easter Sunday morning during Communion service, and finally rested on a beam above the altar, says the "Birmingham Post."

Cinnamon-marked Y.C.C. Annual Meeting.

Our annual meeting is to be held on April 20th. Mr. T. Ogden has given notice of motion that membership subscription be raised from 1s. 6d. to 2s. 6d. per year. A good and representative meeting is desired to thoroughly go into the matter.—Grayshon and Allen, secs.

New West-country Society.

It will be seen from the letter in our correspondence columns this week that a cage bird society has been started for Barnstaple and the North Devon district. We hope it may meet with hearty support, as we understand it promises to fill a want in this neighbourhood. The first open show is fixed for Oct. 29 and 30.

A Cup for Border Fanciers.

Messrs. G. and H. Bennet (Kelso) are giving to the Scottish National C.B.S. a handsome cup for competition at next show, to be won for the best Border Fancy bred 1912, confined to members of Scottish National residing in Edinburgh and Leith, writes Mr. J. R. Meikle, the sec. The cup is to be won three times before becoming member's own property. They are also giving a special prize each year to the cup winner. Fanciers desirous of following Messrs. Bennets' example in any of the other sections will be most heartily welcomed.

How to Prevent Young Birds from Picking Up Stale Food.

Sent by Mr. A. J. Linsey, 3 Palgrave Terrace, Cherryhinton Road, Camb.

I send you an idea for preventing young birds from picking up the stale egg food which drops from the egg drawer. This habit causes them to have diarrhœa. The idea can be carried out at a very small cost. Get a piece of old cage front (about six inches square) with a piece of wire at each corner to form four legs, and three-quarters of an inch long. Then stand it on the bottom of cage under the egg drawer. This I used during last season with great success.—A. J. Linsey.

Prizes of 1s. and two of 6d. each will be given weekly for the best three anecdotes about birds written on postcards. Competitors must be under sixteen years of age, and state whence stories are taken. Two stars indicate the Winning Contribution, one star the runners-up.

*Fearless Thrushes.

During the three weeks' stoppage at Narborough Quarry a pair of Thrushes built their nest on a piece of wood just underneath a shoot down which the rough stone is tipped between two and three tons at a time into the mills. The mills have been working now for several days, but maternal instinct is evidently stronger than fear, for the hen is still sitting on her eggs in spite of the deafening din around her, and it is hoped she will rear her brood in her strange home.—Taken from the "Leicester Daily Mercury" and sent by Eddy Storer (aged 12), 89, Havelock Street, Leicester.

Alarmed by the Parrot.

My grandfather, who was a gentleman servant, put a farmer into his master's smoking room who had called on business to see him. While waiting there the tobacco which was in the room became more tempting than the farmer could resist, and he at once started pushing handfuls into his pocket. Suddenly he became greatly alarmed by calls from an inner room, where the door had been left open. "You rogue; I'll tell master, I'll tell master." So startled did the farmer become that, not knowing it was only the Parrot, he bolted to the door with my grandfather calling for him to stop, but nothing would induce him to do so once he got outside. This is a true story told by my grandfather.—Sent by L. Davey (aged 12), 1, Henry Street, Plymouth.

*The Collie and the Robin.

A very fine-looking collie dog was obviously interested in something lying under a big snow-covered bush. He kept trotting to the spot, waging his tail vigorously, and looking very pleased with himself. Then he stopped and thrust his nose down to within an inch of the snow. On the lady going to see what was the matter, she discovered a Robin lying on the ground in an exhausted condition. It was evidently dying from the cold, and when she reached the spot she found the dog licking the poor bird all over very gently. The dog never attempted to harm the bird in any way, and the Robin seemed not in the least bit afraid of him. The bird was picked up and gently carried into a warm kitchen, the dog trotting proudly along by the lady's side.—Taken from the "Daily News," and sent by H. Vinnicombe, Leas Hotel, Folkestone.

From Field to Show Bench.

One of the best Lectures ever delivered.

By J. STEEL (Dalkeith).

The fifth instalment of a very instructive discourse upon what the writer terms "Varivorous" British birds, delivered before the Edinburgh C.B.S. (with additional matter).

Method of Breeding Gentles.

Taking two large tin boxes, one of which is just so much larger than the other as to permit of its insertion, telescopic fashion, to the inside of the larger box, I solder a piece of tin to prevent the other box from entering more than about two inches, thus leaving a space of not less than nine inches between the bottom of each. This space I partly fill with sawdust. I then punch a lot of fairly large holes in the bottom of the smaller box, punching from the inside. I treat the lid in a similar manner, punching from the outside. I then place a fairly large piece of offal (a defunct rooster or a sheep's head is a fine bait) into the smaller box, and adjust the lid. Then I cover the entire affair with large stones to prevent any undue interference by any cats, dogs, or vermin. Needless to say, all this is at a safe distance from any house. The progress is in direct ratio to the climatic conditions, summer heat and the blue fly being of course essential to the propagation of gentles in the open. They are bred and sold in the winter season by some dealers, who succeed by substituting artificial heat, but I have not yet experimented in that direction, though I fully recognise the value of gentles at that time.

Now when the necessary time for development (about ten days) has elapsed, we find that the flies attracted by the effluvia have entered the box through the perforations, and have laid countless eggs on the contents. These have duly hatched; then when maggots have gorged themselves with the decayed flesh, and have arrived at maturity, they either drop, or with a piece of stick are assisted off, when they crawl through the perforations, and alight among the sawdust. In due course they get rid of the major portion of the offensiveness, with which they are charged both internally and externally—and, I might add, infernally.

Allowing a day or two for the completion of this, I lift off the top portion of the propagator, and tumble the contents of the bottom department on to a large sheet of paper, and recharging both with sawdust and meat as before, I replace same for another batch.

The Process of Cleansing.

Now, the task of separating the gentles from the contaminated sawdust is an easy matter, as when spread out they invariably crawl away from the sun, and if we hold the sides of the paper up they all drop into a box placed to receive them, or a sieve may be used to effect a separation. This scouring process, that is, putting them among fresh sawdust, should be repeated not less than three times, allowing them two or three days in each; at the termination of this time they will be entirely free from any offensiveness, and may be handled by any but supersensitive persons, who should not attempt to keep insectivorous birds. To supply gentles direct, without subjecting them to this scouring process, is almost certain to cause diarrhœa. If the gentles are kept for a certain period they pass into the cocoon or chrysalis stage. These I avoid giving to the more delicate species, but they are greatly relished by the comparatively coarser feeders, including Chaffinch, Buntings, Larks, Greater and Lesser Tits, etc. This change may be retarded by burying the gentles fairly deep among sand, and storing them in a cool place; or the chrysalides may be placed in a small box and be covered with sand. Then if they are placed in a corner of the cage or aviary they soon metamorphose into flies, which, being rather helpless, become an easy prey to the occupants.

To return to our Gold-crest, the subsequent proceedings are simply a gradual diminution of the live insects, till the bird becomes so accustomed to the preserved form as to be practically independent of the former. Now, though I have seen these species kept without any live food, I am convinced that it is advisable to supplement the preserved with at least a small supply of some form of live food, especially during the summer; and it is an easy matter to carry a small box, and gather a little when taking a walk.

The Value of Live Food.

That such is highly appreciated is proved by the joyous bound and look of eager expectancy which follow its production. That, of itself, were sufficient reward, but when we add to this the benefits to health and appearance, which are derived therefrom, I am tempted to say that the fancier who has not the time, opportunity, or inclination, to give his birds every such attention, should not attempt the task, or at least should test his patience and abilities by first keeping some of the hardiest species.

Unfortunately, most of the resident species come into our possession during winter, and the task of meating off is then intensified, as the supply and variety of live insects are limited indeed. But a close observation of the habits of these birds convinces me that they adapt themselves more readily to the preserved food at that season. Their natural food consisting largely of chrysalides renders the change less drastic. A few spiders can generally be routed out, and a couple of limed grasses are very useful for catching them. A visit to the bakers and a tip to the young apprentice can be relied on in order to procure a few house flies. Of course, mealworms, like the poor, are always with us, but I have not much faith in these as a meating-off medium. A few small ones may be given, for preference—those that have just cast their skins—when they are white and tender. Whether because of the hard and indigestible nature of the skins or not, I cannot say; but I feel that many of these most delicate species are killed by the kindness of their keepers, who, with the best intentions, supply them with too many mealworms. I have more faith in the gentle and house fly. On one occasion I had a rare specimen of the Gold-crest brought to me, which seemed to be in extremis, the severity of a storm having been too much for him. Rolling him in a piece of soft flannel, I placed him near the fire, and on enlisting the assistance of the entire household, I organised a hunt. Needless to say, this was highly enjoyed by the juveniles. The "flapper" and myself chose the cellar. In hopes of locating some caterpillars of the white moth, etc., she was turning over some old flannels in a manner which bodes ill for her future husband's pockets; while I was after spiders. I had just secured my third, when I was startled by that shriek, which can only emanate from a "flapper" or a locomotive. The cause of her excitement proved to be a large bag of thistle heads, which she had gathered the previous summer, and which I had condemned as being damp and unripe, with the result that they had been thrown into the cellar and forgotten. I am aware of the presence of grubs in thistles, and recognise their value, but never did I see thistles infested like these; they were absolutely swarming. Suffice it to say, by them I soon had my Gold-crest in good condition again.

Teaching Gold-crests to Bathe.

The bath is essential to good condition. Many fanciers spoil their birds by driving them into this, with the result that they get such a fright that ever after it is a source of terror. I overcame the initial aversion by hanging on the bath without water for a time, and throwing a few titbits into it, till the bird does not hesitate to enter. Then I begin with just a very little water, choosing a sunny day for the experiment, and letting him see other birds enjoy a plunge before him. If the weather is cold, add a little warm water, to take the chill off, and never omit to have a little sand in the bottom of the bath. The water for these small birds should not exceed half an inch in depth.

Never allow them to have access to the bath after midday during winter, and always let them have a feed in artificial light every night. The reason for this is that few houses have more than 8 hours of daylight during the winter months, and this entails an interval of sixteen hours without food, which is much too long. When turning off the artificial light, always reduce same for a few minutes, in order that the birds may just see; they will then arrange themselves for the night. Otherwise, the sudden deprivation of light may be the cause of their having to pass the night clinging to the wires, or on the floor.

Many injure themselves in their accustomed sleeping places. Never have your cages placed that the inmates are in the direct rays of moonlight. I have by repeated and careful observation found that this is a common cause of those nocturnal stampedes, which are the bane of the British bird-keeper. I have seen this attributed to dreaming, spiders, mice, etc. That the latter cause is a reasonable one, I have no doubt, but I have ocular proof that the sudden burst of moonlight (which follows when the moon emerges from a cloud) can cause those frantic dashes, which are so contagious.

Never keep a fresh capture in close proximity to the rest of your birds, especially if such be a Redpoll, Bramble-finch, or Lark, as these, I find, are very liable to stampede; the second-named especially so. I have dealt at some length with the subject of meating-off, so I may say that the same applies to the next bird I will, by request, treat of, viz., the Tree-creeper.

THE FASCINATION OF AN AVIARY.

By G. E. RATTIGAN.

The Shama's Pet Aversions.

There are two birds in the aviary which are his pet aversions, these are a pair of Blue Tits, and the reason of his dislike to them is as follows: It is the privilege of the Shama to receive four or five mealworms every morning before the other birds get theirs. The first two or three he quickly swallows whole, but after this he flies down with each one to the ground and proceeds to eat it in a much more leisurely manner. This is the moment the Tits are on the watch for, and no sooner does the Shama drop his worm, after biting off a dainty morsel, than there is a flash of blue and the worm has vanished, under the very nose, so to speak, of the astonished and outraged Shama. With such lightning rapidity do these little birds swoop down and away, that they hardly seem to touch the ground and have vanished with their booty before one can well realise what has happened. The Shama has long since given up all hope of trying to catch and punish them for their impudence, and contents himself with showing his baffled rage by an angry display of drooping wings and outstretched tail, his whole body meanwhile reverberating with his excited though impotent chattering.

I have frequently seen the unfortunate Shama deprived in this manner of three worms in succession. His look of absolute bewilderment when the last of the three worms disappeared was really very laughable. Whenever he sees the Tits in a position in which he hopes he may be able to take them unawares, such as when they are engaged in feeding or bathing, he makes a sudden dash at them, but has never succeeded in catching either of them yet, and I don't for a moment suppose he will ever do so, but it will be an evil day for them if he does.

Disliked by all other Birds.

This Shama is also an expert fisher, and some time ago when I kept some minnows for a Kingfisher I possessed, I used to supply the Shama with a few in a large earthenware dish, and it was very interesting to see the clever manner in which he used to catch them.

The tamest bird that I, at present, possess, is an Indian Shrike. I keep him caged up by himself, as all the other birds appear, for some strange reason, to dislike him intensely, and would certainly mob him to death if they had the chance. In appearance this Shrike is very similar to the familiar Red-backed Shrike, but is a trifle smaller. It is, however, very different to the latter in disposition, for it is most mild and peaceably disposed to other birds, and its only desire is to be left in peace.

It is allowed out of its cage every morning to have a fly round, but will return to it at once for a mealworm, and sometimes even of its own accord. This species is said to have a very pretty song of its own, and also to imitate those of other birds, but the only sound I have heard mine utter is a harsh kind of croak, and it only utters this when expecting to receive a mealworm, or to be let out for a fly round.

A Sweetly Pretty Sight.

Two other very fascinating little birds I possess are a pair of Longtailed Tits, and it would be hard to conceive of anything daintier or more graceful than these little birds are in all their movements and strange little ways. They are both as tame as possible, which is an additional attraction, and always feed out of, or perch on, my fingers without the slightest hesitation or fear. It is, indeed, a sweetly pretty sight to see them clinging to the bars at the top of their cage with one foot, whilst in the other they grasp a piece of cheese, or anything that is too big for them to swallow at once, munching away at it much after the manner of a small child with a piece of cake.

These little Tits are very fond of flies, and it was largely on their account that I first commenced to breed these insects, which I now find so useful as an extra tit bit for all the birds.

How to Breed Flies.

They (the flies) are bred very easily without the least trouble, and are, I am sure, an excellent "conditioner" for all birds. All that is necessary is to procure some gentles and place them with some bran in a tin box. They will keep like this for any length of time in winter. When any flies are required one has merely to place the box in some warm spot, and in roughly about 48 hours any number of flies can be secured.

Another thing I have discovered the Longtails to be very fond of is grapes, and I always give them one every other day. The above, plus a good soft food mixture with a little cheese minced up finely and mixed with it, and two or three mealworms cut in half, is all that is needed to keep these tiny birds in fine condition.

I must now hasten to conclude this essay, which is already very much longer than I had originally intended it to be, but once on this, to me, fascinating subject it is difficult to bring myself to a stop, as there always seems to be so much of interest that I have left unsaid, and it is only the fear of becoming tedious that restrains me from continuing. I would, however, like to add just two things more. One is, that for rearing delicate softbills I don't believe there is anything to beat wasp grubs, both live and cured, though of course live ants' eggs are also very good; and the other is that after many trials I think the best all-round medicine for a bird room is castor oil; cod liver oil, on the contrary, I have found to be quite useless.

CANARY QUERIES.

Answered by Claude St. John.

CLOSED RINGS (G.M.O.).—The risks attached to the use of closed rings can be avoided by using only open rings which you can put on either when the young leave the nest or when you are separating them from their parents. If you used the rings with danges there should not be any danger of causing injury in putting them on. They supply all that is really necessary for identification and pedigree records.

PERSISTENT DIARRHŒA (F.W.).—There must be some cause at work you have not discovered, and if this is found and removed there is no reason why the birds should not recover. Is your water supply above suspicion? If any doubt exists boil it, and allow it to stand until cold before giving to birds. Examine the hemp seed, and if the kernel is discoloured reject it. For the next fortnight give a staple diet of two parts canary to one part summer rape. Every second day give half a teaspoonful per bird of a mixture of equal parts hemp, millet, and teazle, and on the alternate days a similar quantity of crushed arrowroot biscuit well sprinkled with maw. Dissolve a dram of ammoniated citrate of iron and quinine in an ounce of sherry, add 30 drops of tincture of steel, and give 15 drops of this mixture in the water daily for a week; the next week give a teaspoonful of lime-water in each drinker every second day.

HEAPY AND PANTING (S.B.C.).—Give a staple diet of three parts canary to one part summer rape. Every second day give a half teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with four drops of sherry and two of cod liver oil emulsion mixed in it, and sprinkled with maw. Give a leaf of dandelion or spray of chickweed daily. Limit diet to this for a fortnight. In the water give for one day six drops syrup of rhubarb, and as much Epsom salts as will cover a threepenny piece, and afterwards give four drops each tincture of gentian, tincture of calumba, and aromatic sulphuric acid every second day for a week. If panting does not quickly abate, alternate with the gentian mixture 20 drops of whisky, five each of oxymel of squills, and ipecacuanha wine, and two of eucalyptus oil, well shaken together. Withhold bath for the present, and see bird is in a cosy place quite free from draughts.

ROLLERS NOT SINGING (Edina).—There is nothing wrong with the seed sent. It is merely an idiosyncrasy that your bird refuses it and eats only canary; you need not worry about it. You might give a staple of rape only in the seed box three or four times a week, and add separately a small teaspoonful, or less, of canary seed. To try to bring him on song again, mix four drops of sherry and two of good cod liver oil emulsion in half a teaspoonful of the soft food, and give him every second day for a fortnight; on the alternate days give a pinch of maw or a pinch of mixed seed, and a leaf of dandelion daily. Omit carrot and fruit now greenstuff is available. Add a pinch of Epsom salts to the water for three days, and afterwards four drops each of tincture of gentian, tincture of calumba, and dilute sulphuric acid every second day for a week.

SEX DISTINCTION (One Lost in Sex).—Several replies lately have dealt with this subject. You would also find details fully described and illustrated in "Canary Breeding for Beginners," and on a plate in Part VI. of "Our Canaries." Mr. Norman has shown the external distinctions wonderfully well. The distinctions are the same in all breeds of Canaries, but domestication has so nearly obliterated them that it is impossible to convey a proper idea of them in writing. Nothing but practical experience and close observation will enable you to become expert at naming the sex of a given bird. The song is the best guide; that of the cock being full, sonorous, and continuous, that is, not broken and choppy, in contrast to the, at best, twittering, choppy, harsh efforts of the hen. The throat of the cock also swells out and throbs very plainly whilst he is singing. He is bolder looking, more pushful and assertive, and at this season the vent is more prominent and pointed in shape than that of the hen.

BREEDING SEASON IN AUSTRALIA (Emigrant).—(1) No, the breeding season in Australia is not the same time as ours. It would extend, I expect, from about October to January, and the present time would be about the close of their moulting season. (2) I do not know what it would cost to send ten Canaries out there. You should write and enquire of the firm of shippers (Messrs. Van Oppen), whose advert. you will find in our columns every week. Say we advised you to do so. They will tell you the exact cost.

INFLAMED EYE (Novice).—It is quite possible for the inflamed condition to arise as you suspect. You should have well bathed the eye in lukewarm water at the time, and then dropped in one drop of boracic lotion morning and afternoon for a few days. By this time, however, the effect should have passed off without assistance. Go on using the remedy you name as long as it lasts, or as may seem necessary, in order to give it a proper trial. I shall be pleased to hear the result.

KEEPING EGGS (Kenmore).—See reply to "Crest" last week about desultory laying. I'm afraid by the time this appears the first eggs laid will be quite too stale to be worth sitting. You ought to have given them to other hens when these hens did not show signs of sitting in a week after laying. Did you keep a nest-egg in the nests whilst hens were laying? The failure to do so will sometimes suffice to put a hen off sitting. About one week is, in a general way, the limit for keeping Canary's eggs before putting them to incubate, but if properly kept, well covered with bran or meal, in a temperate but not very dry atmosphere, and turned regularly morning and evening, they may safely be put to hatch after a fortnight or a little more.

A MATING FIASCO (An Anxious Novice).—The birds were probably not very keen on mating when you put them together, but even so, I think if you had paid no heed to their apparent squabbles during the first few days of wedded bliss they would soon have grown fresher and settled down to business. You did not follow directions in "Canary Breeding for Beginners," or they would not have had a full supply of nesting material as soon as put together. A mere tuft of moss is sufficient for them to play with until their behaviour shows they are ready for building in earnest. Give each bird now half a teaspoonful of egg food, well sprinkled with a mixture of equal parts maw, sesame, and gold of pleasure every second day, and on the alternate days a similar quantity of equal parts hemp, inga, millet, linseed, and teazle. Give two leaves of dandelion to each daily. As soon as they appear keen put them together again and take no notice of their little squabbles.

DOUBTFUL SEX (Verh. Sap.).—The behaviour of the doubtful bird with the nesting material is certainly more suggestive of a cock than a hen, but it is not conclusive evidence. The assertion that he is backward on account of youth is rather frail at this time. Practically any healthy cock hatched last season should now be in full song and high condition. Treat him for a week as advised to "An Anxious Novice," but give each item daily, and then try putting him with the hen and note results. If he does not prove himself in a very few days, provided the hen is fresh, I should no longer entertain a doubt of his sex.

COCK AND HEN (I. A.).—(1) It is absolutely useless to have the hen mated whilst moulting, as she will not breed in this condition. Separate the birds, and keep the hen in an equable temperature. Let her bathe when she likes in fine weather. In addition to staple seed diet give a half teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake, with four drops of sherry and two of cod liver oil emulsion mixed in it, and sprinkled with a mixture of maw and gold of pleasure every second day, and on the alternate days a similar quantity of a mixture of equal parts hemp, inga, millet and teazle. Give a leaf of fresh dandelion daily. In the drinking water give six drops of tincture of gentian and four of tincture of steel two days in every three until feathers cease dropping. Do not mate her again until she has fully recovered from moulting. (2) There is no reason whatever why this cock should not breed successfully this season, provided the hen is in proper condition.

VARIOUS (J.P.).—(1) The cock is generally bolder, more alert and domineering or assertive, and at this season should be in full song, showing a very pronounced swelling and throbbing of the throat whilst singing. If the vent is examined it will be found distinctly more prominent and pointed in shape than that of the hen. All differences, except the last-named, are comparative and often trifling, so that only practical experience can make one expert at recognising them. (2) The hen had probably not laid the full clutch. She may have completed it by now and commenced sitting. If another hen was just beginning to sit with a small clutch she should have been given the first three eggs of this hen if they were already several days old, and the hen that laid them had not laid any more. (3) I cannot tell without more particulars why the hen sat four days and then deserted the eggs. Sometimes the eggs so deserted will be found dried up in the shell, when the hen may by some means recognise the futility of persevering in a forlorn hope. Again, you might have been removing the cock, and some hens resent this, and promptly "go on strike" until he is returned. There is no fee required for answers in this column.

TWO YORKSHIRES (E.J.K.).—See cages are kept as clean as possible and strew floor with coarse, gritty sand. Allow birds in fine weather to bathe daily, if they will do so. See they have plenty of fresh pure air always, but are quite free from draughts and extreme fluctuations of temperature. Feed both birds as follows for two or three weeks: Staple, plain canary only. Every second day give separately half a teaspoonful of summer rape, and on the alternate days a pinch of maw twice a week, and half a teaspoonful of a mixture of equal parts hemp, inga, millet and teazle on the remaining days. Give a leaf of fresh dandelion daily. On the days when not giving rape give the one with voracious appetite a morsel of bread and milk sprinkled with soft sugar, and add six drops of syrup of rhubarb and a pinch of Epsom salts to the water for two days. Afterwards dissolve a crystal of sulphate of soda the size of a small pea, ditto of sulphate of iron half as big in the water, and add six drops of dilute sulphuric acid. Give this every second day for a week. Give the other bird a morsel of bread and milk as above, but with two drops of cod liver oil emulsion added to it, and in the water add 20 drops each of whisky, five each of ipecacuanha wine and oxymel of squills, and two of eucalyptus oil, well shaken together. Give this for a week.

NOT LAYING (Robt. Steele).—What did you separate the birds for? You mention no cause, and if it was only because they had got no "forrader" than you mention, you were much too impatient and did quite wrong to separate them. It is not unlikely you have ruined your prospects with this hen for this season. See reply to "An Anxious Novice," and treat the hen as therein advised, but during the first week add to the drinking water ten drops of syrup of bucktborn for two consecutive days, and for the remainder of the week the soda mixture advised to "E. J. K."

NOT SITTING (Crest).—There is nothing you can give the hen to "make her more broody." Your best chance of getting results from this hen is to mate up a common hen or two (which might be run with one cock, and would still further increase the chances) and transfer her eggs to these foster-parents. Beyond taking a daily peep in the nest, and removing or replacing eggs when necessary, leave the nest pan quite alone, but you need not neglect the cleaning of the cage, unless it is just when the hen is, or should be, about beginning to sit. When the first egg of a clutch is laid, remove it and put in a dummy egg. Remove each egg as laid afterwards, leaving the dummy to keep hen attached to nest. Then when the clutch is complete you will probably find the hen commence to sit quite naturally. Keep eggs in a cool place, covered with bran or meal, and give them a half turn morning and evening.

LIME IN EYE (F. M.).—This depends wholly upon the nature of the lime, whether it was "quick" or not. In any case it required immediate treatment, and I am afraid you can do very little for it now. Dissolve a large teaspoonful of boracic acid in a teacupful of hot water, and bathe eye with a little of this morning and evening for a few days, and after bathing and drying drop in the eye one drop of rose water, in an ounce of which you have previously dissolved as much boracic acid as will cover a sixpence.

HEN WITH COLD (W.H.S.).—Keep the hen in a quite comfortable temperature for a little while, but see that it is equable, quite free from draughts and from the fumes of burning lights or other impure air. Given these conditions the mixture advised to "B.P.C." on April 6th, which you say you have used, should put her quite right very soon. Slightly anoint the sore place with Lanocyllin, but do not leave on any surplus to be rubbed about the perches. Give a staple diet of plain canary, and every second day a pinch of summer rape separately. For the rest give the extra advised to "An Anxious Novice." If this is not quite successful in, say, a fortnight, stop the above-named medicine and give instead 20 drops of whisky, five each of oxymel of squills, and syrup of tolu, and two of eucalyptus oil well shaken together in the water two days in every three for a week or so.

WILL HE BREED? (C. F.).—Certainly; there is not the slightest reason why a colour-fed cock will not breed. Those who have told you he will not breed because he has been colour-fed are either "pulling your leg" or ignorantly talking the wildest nonsense. Literally tens of thousands of young are bred every year from colour-fed parents. Your bird may possibly be rather young, but when the hen had really started nesting he would doubtless have responded to her quickly enough. Mate the birds again and leave them together this time. You might give them the extra feeding advised to "An Anxious Novice."

STARVING YOUNG (L. C. H.).—See the reply to "R.D.," which also applies to your case. As the hen is young and only one youngster hatched, it is a little more excusable for her not feeding, especially as she did make a start. The prospects for the next brood are certainly a little better, and she will probably rear them if you carry out the instructions about giving food and greenstuff fresh frequently in small quantities. Three weeks after the late brood were hatched will be a very good time to return the cock to her. By this time he will probably be at liberty from the other hen, when you may put him back to the first hen at once.

PULLING OUT FLIGHTS (Wilson).—Have you handled and examined the bird? If not, do so to see if it is troubled with grey lice, which live upon the bird. You will soon find them running about your hand if they are in evidence. In this case, try a teaspoonful of sulphuretted potash in a pint of the water used in the bird's bath. Tie a few short pieces of strong string on the cage wires to divert her attention. If there are any dry broken quills, gently remove them to allow new feathers to grow. Give a morsel of bread and milk slightly dusted with flowers of sulphur every second day for a week, and on the alternating days add to the water ten drops of glycerine and as much chlorate of potash as will cover a sixpence. Allow her to bathe freely in fine weather.

KEEPING MICE FROM CAGE (A.L.D.).—Judging from your description of your bird-room, I do not hesitate to say it is impossible to keep the mice out of the cage except by extermination. Your best plan is to try a course of the Virus remedy advertised in our columns. It is quite futile trying to keep them away by odours. Strewing chloride of lime about is believed to be one of the best of these deterrents. As a rule the stench of these "remedies" makes the hobby anything but a pleasure. If you put a band of tin around each leg of the trestle three inches wide, and about four inches from the floor, it will effectually prevent them climbing up to the cage that way; but if there is anything overhanging them they will quickly take advantage of that means of gaining access. Taken altogether, extermination is your only hope, and Virus may help in that.

BORDERS NOT FEEDING (R. D.).—It is rarely possible to put one's finger on the real cause of birds not feeding young. You should get Part VII. of "Our Canaries," wherein you will find a chapter dealing very fully with the question. Some hens that will not feed when the cock is with them will do so tolerably well when they are left to hatch and rear the young alone. In the next round, when you return the eggs for the hen to commence sitting, remove the cock and keep him out of sight of the hen, and do not return him until she is ready to commence nesting again. You must watch her for a few hours after removing him to see if she comes off the nest bent on not returning to it. If she does so, and stays off a few hours, there will be nothing for it but to return the cock and let things take their own course. To be further provided for contingencies you should get another hen nesting at the same time, so that you may have a chance of transferring the young, if necessary. When the young are hatched, give a bath in which a little common salt as dissolved; vary the food well; give only small quantities, and give it fresh, and renew frequently. For green food give small quantities of lettuce, chickweed, or groundsel, three or four times a day.

TENDER FEET (W. Gill).—I assume this is all that is wrong, as you say the bird is quite well and in song. See if the claws are overgrown, and if so trim them back to a proper length, and in any case bathe the feet for a few minutes daily for, say, four days, in a warm solution of boracic acid—a small teaspoonful of acid dissolved in a saucerful of warm water. After bathing dry gently anoint feet sparingly with zinc ointment. Keep perches quite clean. Glad to hear other bird is now well.

FOOD AND FERTILITY (R. S. Bowell).—(1) I cannot say from personal experience whether you can rear young from the shell with just as good results by using the food you name as with the orthodox egg food, as I have not attempted this feat with that particular brand. Still, I see no reason whatever why it should not be a success if the hens seem to be fond of it and thrive well upon it. These things depend very largely upon the idiosyncrasies of individual hens. Unless some kind of preservative were used in the making of the food in question, which, by the way, I should consider most undesirable, you would be about as likely to get septic fever with it as with other egg food. Given absolute cleanliness in cages, and all the food and water vessels, and freshness and purity of all food supplied you may, figuratively, to a very large extent, snap your fingers at this terrible scourge. (2) If the birds are both in good virile condition any egg laid thirty hours after they are put together may be fertile, but it does not necessarily follow that such will be the case.

Answered by G. E. Weston.

A GREENFINCH (Don).—It is probably some local skin trouble. Get a small quantity of sulphur ointment and gently anoint the place twice daily; use a very little—a light smear only.

THE BEST PLAN (Church).—The hen Goldfinches should be removed from the room and out of hearing of the cocks. The same thing applies to cock Bullfinches where it is desired to utilise the hen Bullies for Hybrid breeding.

WILL A "HAMMERHEAD" BREED? (Oxo).—I must confess that I have never heard of a bird called a "Hammerhead." If you mean the Yellowhammer, then I am afraid you will not find it easy to induce this species to nest in a cage, though I shouldn't be surprised to find a tame hen laying eggs, or a hand-reared one making a nest and laying eggs. I should provide an old Blackbird's nest on the floor of the cage, and see if the hen would re-line it for her own use. If you do not refer to the Yellowhaumer, give the correct name of the bird.

THE CASE OF A LINNET (H. A.). You should not give niger seed, but a small teaspoonful of maw seed daily, or, better still, plantain and maw mixed in equal parts. Add a portion of teazle to the daily seed mixture (about one third). As medicine, get from a chemist half-an-ounce of crystals of citrate of iron and quinine and dissolve fresh daily in two tablespoonfuls of drinking water as much as will, when crushed, lie on a threepenny piece. Give this for 5 or 6 days, then on alternate days (plain water in between) over a period of 10 to 14 days, as may seem advisable.

A GOLDFINCH MULE (Sheffield).—A Goldfinch Mule kept as a pet needs treatment differing hardly at all from that given the pet Canary (read "Nutshell" booklet No. 5, post free 2½d.). Let the stock seed mixture be: Canary 3 parts, teazle 2 parts, hemp 1 part, summer rape half part, by measure. Get also a packet each of some good maker's "Finch mixture" and "Wild Seed mixture"; give a teaspoonful once or twice weekly (not both on the same day) to lend variety to the menu. The usual greenfoods and seeding weeds are relished.

MEALWORM BREEDING (Softbill).—I must have answered this question many scores—it seems hundreds—of times. Particulars as to the breeding of mealworms, too, will be found in "Nutshell" booklet No. 26, post free 2½d. Further, it is crammed with invaluable information concerning the keeping of Softbills. Invest two and-a-half coppers therein and you will call me blessed ever after!

LINNETS IN A CAGE (Hybrid).—It is not at all uncommon for hen Linnets to build and lay in a cage; but it is extremely uncommon for them to rear their own young in a cage; in fact, I have never personally known them to do so. I have bred Linnets myself in an aviary, and I have had Linnets reared by my hen Canaries. The young were very disappointing, however. I have neither had nor known wilder birds than those my Canaries brought up; they were as mad as the proverbial March hares, and simply refused to get steady. I believe, too, it is quite the usual experience to find Canary-reared Linnets like this; a very puzzling thing. In short, I consider it is waste of time to breed Linnets in captivity, unless one has some very special object in view (such as an endeavour to see whether an extra good cock and an extra good hen would produce exhibition specimens). I pulled some old Linnets' nests to pieces (after baking them in the oven), and gave to my birds for nesting material. The old birds had an unlimited supply of seeding shepherd's purse and chickweed, and fed principally on this, together with groundsel and, later on, mouse-ear, knot-grass, and plantain. Choose such greenfood as is swarming with minute insect life, such as smother fly.

TWO FOOD SAMPLES (J.W.H.).—I think that sample No. 1 is just a little too dry; but there is not much to find fault with. It should not be used regularly, however, for this kind of food is not very easy of digestion, and is of a rather "forcing" nature. Sample No. 2 is of fairly good quality (I don't know what you pay for it), but I should prefer to give it mixed with a little well scalded puppy meal (crushed). Bathe the eye twice daily with warm water in which a crystal or two of permanganate of potash has been dissolved. Afterwards gently dry the spot and anoint the bare place with a tiny smear of boracic ointment.

A VARIETY (An Old Reader).—The song of the Nightingale is a continuous warble (broadly speaking); that is to say, the phrases are not short and disjointed like those that go to make up the music of the Song Thrush. I do not know of any bird which can be said to sing similarly to the Nightingale—most of the latter bird's trills and passages are quite distinctive in character. Several birds can claim an almost equal sweetness of voice—the Garden Warbler and Blackcap, for instance. The Virginian Nightingale is not a "Nightingale" at all, properly speaking; this is merely one of the popular names given this species. It is about the size of our Blackbird; song loud and flute-like, but its phrases are short and not very varied. The Blackcap Warbler is about the size of a Linnet—a little more chubby in build, maybe. A bird steady and on song is worth at least 20s.; one recently caught, but well on food, ought to be obtainable at about half that sum.

A THRUSH'S LEGS (E. R. C.).—The legs of your bird have become very "scaly," as fanciers term it, and the trouble is not contagious, but is, in fact, liable to occur in the case of any bird, more especially an old one. Some species seem to suffer from scaly legs worse than others; and one of these is the Thrush. The scales are not difficult to remove, and their removal should certainly be undertaken whenever they impede the free movement of a bird. The simplest way is to soften them by soaking, or washing, in fairly hot soap lather; then gently lift (or pull) off the scales by means of a fingernail inserted under them. Hold the leg, or toe, firmly whilst doing so. The scales give the leg a "cracked" appearance. Afterwards rinse the legs in fairly warm water; a few drops of Condy's fluid in the latter, if possible. Should blood be inadvertently drawn during the operation, touch the spot (after cleansing it) with a little Friar's Balsam.

GOING IN FOR MULING (Bullfinch).—The cock Bullfinch is not likely to be of use as a Mule breeder. Your friend could try him with a hen Canary, of course, but the eggs will probably all prove unfertile. The best (surest) mating would be cock Linnet to hen Canary. There will be the same risk if he pairs the cock Bullie with the hen Goldie. The Goldfinch-Bullfinch Hybrid is quite common; but it is bred from cock Goldie and hen Bullie. It is best as a general thing to leave the hen Canary by herself to incubate the eggs and rear the young. I have had cock Linnets, however, which never interfered either with nest, eggs or young, and which fed the hen assiduously while she was rearing her brood.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by Wesley T. Page, F.Z.S., Etc.

HELD OVER QUERIES.—I shall have to trespass on the forbearance of C.L.H. and H.J.E. till our next issue.

ZEBRA FINCHES (Manzanita).—What kind of a nest-box have you? I conclude it has no cover. This is all wrong for Zebra Finches, which build a spherical nest with a hole at the side for entrance. Get a square box, say, 6 inches square, nail on the top, and at one corner near the top cut a hole, 1¼ inches, either square or round, nail a small twiggy branch on the bottom of the box, so that the twiggy portion will come in front of the nest hole; hang this up and supply some hay and a Canary nest bag as building material, and I think you'll fare better next time. If not, part with them and get another pair.

BACK-YARD AVIARY (Quong Sing).—(1) Have two pairs of Budgerigars; it is better not to overcrowd, and you must reserve room for the prospective broods. Cockatiels are the most suitable. You could have a pair of Redrumps; these breed pretty freely, but are sometimes quarrelsome at breeding time. (2) Apply to any of the advertisers in our columns, stipulate for the entrance hole to be on top of the husk, and you will then get the right kind. (3) You really require small barrels for the Cockatiels and Parrakeets, but they cost more than husks. Send me a stamped addressed envelope per the editor, and I will put you right with a small sketch.

PARROT IN BAD PLUMAGE (T.S.)—Add ripe fruit and a few nuts, and supply following seed mixture: one quart each canary and white millet, one part each hemp and oats; half a pint each shelled nuts, grit (not sand), paddy rice, wheat, sunflower seeds, and a few chillies; well mix and keep a supply in cage. Every other day put half a teaspoonful of byno-phosphates in drinking water. Spray it (a "mist" sprayer is the best) with chilled water once a week, choosing a genial day and keeping out of all draught till dry. Birds should never be subjected to draught. Lightly moisten its daily piece of bread and dust with flowers of sulphur. The first moult is very protracted in this country. Continue above treatment for, say, a month; then report progress. The bowels must be kept moving freely—not watery-loose. One teaspoonful of Dinneford's magnesia in the water occasionally will secure this. You must not use a metal drinker while giving drugs.

A YOUNG GREY (Mrs. R.)—Lightly dust bread sop and maize with flowers of sulphur daily. Bathe nostrils with dilute glyco-thymoline. If this is too costly ask your chemist to mix you an equivalent in small quantity, but for preference procure the former. Don't continue sop and maize any longer than is necessary. Keep a tin of following in its cage, and as soon as it is eating heartily of this, gradually wean it from the sop and maize. Seed mixture: One quart each canary and white millet, one pint each crushed oats and hemp, half a pint each sunflower seed and shelled nuts, the whole to be well mixed. Also supply ripe fruit, and a piece of dry plain biscuit, and keep a piece of clean cuttlebone hanging in cage. Mix a little grit with the sand. Continue keeping it warm, but it must have fresh air without draught. In case of any adverse symptoms developing, write at once; otherwise report progress in two or three weeks.

AILING BUDGERIGAR (G.E.B.).—Get a bottle of Dinneford's magnesia and give bird two drops from the end of a quill, direct to beak. After an interval of three days repeat dose, and again as required to keep bowels moving freely—not watery-loose. These birds are small drinkers; if yours drink fairly well twice a day that will be sufficient. For a week put three drops of Friar's Balsam daily into a crock or glass drinker, holding about two tablespoonfuls of water—if it does not drink you must give three drops of the solution twice a day. Give canary and white millet in equal parts as the main diet, but for the next month keep a millet spray in the cage; renew it when picked clean. Also supply fresh seeding (flowering) grass liberally, but it must not be tainted with frost—keep the bird where it will have plenty of air and light, but be out of draught. Report progress a fortnight hence. You were not entitled to a reply per post (see rules), but as case appeared urgent we have sent one.

AILING GREY PARROT (W.A.C.).—Re previous reply, give Dinneford's magnesia as directed, and on the other days well colour the drinking water with chemical food. (1) You need not go back to the boiled maize. Lightly damp the seed by sprinkling a little water over it from your finger tips; then dust with flowers of sulphur; or you can give the latter on either a moistened crust of bread, piece of sponge cake, or plain biscuit. (2) I opine it is irritated with a heated skin and troubled with parasites. The magnesia, etc., should alleviate. (3) A dilute solution of fir tree oil—half a teaspoonful to a pint of water—will be helpful to spray the bird with twice a week. Use a "mist" sprayer, and avoid its eyes as much as possible. Also use insect powder. The cage ought to be well scalded out—perches, food hoppers, etc.; it is undoubtedly infested with the parasites. First scald, well swilling all crevices; then scour with carbolic soap, swill with clear water and leave in open to dry. Treat bird with the solution and powder till it is comfortable again. (4) The pink swelling is the crop. I take it the bird is getting ripe fruit, nuts, and a piece of plain biscuit; also has access to cuttlebone and grit.

WHAT PARROT? (K. H. Sheffield).—It is an Alexandrine Parrakeet, probably a hen, but both sexes talk in Parrots. There is a great deal of variability as to talking capacity, but I have known many very talented Alexandrines. Keep it where it can hear and see what is going on, and talk to it, and teach it by constant repetition, and as soon as it gets into decent condition it will prove more or less responsive. Alexandrines are hardy and will live in a roomy aviary out of doors all the year round. Keep it where it will get plenty of light and air, yet be out of draught. On warm, sunny days it can go out of doors, but sun should not shine directly on the cage. Spray the eyes daily with a rose water and zinc eye solution, from any chemist, but keep it strictly out of draught till dry again. Many Parrots are moulting at present. Supply following seed mixture: One quart each canary and white millet, one pint each oats and hemp; half a pint each of shelled nuts, grit (not sand), paddy rice, maize, and sunflower seeds—well mix and keep a supply in cage. Also supply ripe fruit, green food, and plain biscuit, and keep a piece of clean cuttlebone in the cage. Every fourth day, so long as voidings are not watery loose, put one teaspoonful of Dinneford's magnesia in the usual supply of drinking water, and on other days put in the same quantity of byno-phosphates. It will become tamer I should say when it is more fit. Must not use metal drinker for drugs—report progress a month hence.

WHAT PARROT AND HOW TO FEED? (T.M.V.).—It is a Blue-fronted Amazon. If it has been getting boiled maize, continue this, but its main diet should be a seed mixture of canary, millet, oats, hemp, wheat, paddy rice, and sunflower seeds (see other replies for proportions), ripe fruit, nuts, greenfood, and plain biscuit. It must also have access to grit and cuttlebone. As it is a young bird, half a teaspoonful of byno-phosphates in the drinking water several times a week would be helpful, and if there are any signs of constipation, the same quantity of Dinneford's magnesia in the water must be used occasionally to keep bowels moving freely, but not really loose.

TO KEEP WITH BRITISH FINCHES (W.P.Q).—You can keep any of the following, compatible with the space of aviary:—Zebra, Ribbon, Red-headed, Striated, Spice, Bib, Ruficauda, Serins (in variety), Afario, Cuban and Olive Finches, Bronze-wing, Magpie, Black-headed, White-headed, and Tri-colour Mannikins, Bengalese, Silverbills, Grey and Green Singing Finches, Long-tailed Grassfinches, Gold-breasted, Grey, Orange-cheek, and St. Helena Waxbills, Black-headed, Hooded, and Colombian Siskins, Cape Canaries, Napoleon and Madagascar Weavers, Paradise Whydahs. All of which will thrive under the treatment given to seed-eaters. Only one pair of each species should be kept, and the young disposed of as they become adults.

YOUNG QUAIL (A.P.).—Supply young with custard or minced egg—insectile mixture, live ants' eggs (or if these are not procurable, a good sample of the dried "eggs" as bought), gentles, and any other small insect larvæ or pupæ you can procure. They will soon take to small seed, and the general diet of the adult birds. Do not allow them too large a range, they should be sheltered alike from too hot sun and heavy rain. Hope you'll have luck.

BUDGERIGARS THROWN OUT OF NEST (A.M.).—Am inclined to recommend small barrels in lieu of the husks, and if you care to send me a stamped addressed envelope, I can put you on to these, but their cost will be triple that of husks. Am afraid there is no remedy for it, if the strongest youngsters are determined to oust the weaker. "Looking after number one" is an early development of all forms of life. All you can do is to make it as difficult as possible. The barrels will do this, besides being more roomy, thus possibly removing one inclination for such behaviour. Perhaps you would inform me what proportion are reared. How many young have been reared per brood, say, for the last six nests.

INDIAN PARROT (Juno).—I do not think you have cause for anxiety concerning this bird. With the Parrot tribe the first moults in this country are usually somewhat protracted. Keep it where it will get light and air without draught. I should give Dinneford's magnesia, one teaspoonful in the drinking water, every fourth day, but if the bowels become very loose only give it once a week. On other days put half a teaspoonful of byno-phosphates in the drinking water. Don't use a metal drinker while giving these drugs. Its diet should consist of seed mixture (see reply re Alexandrine Parrakeet), ripe fruit, nuts, and plain biscuit—also grit and cuttlebone. Do not give table scraps or any sops and messes.

SWELLING ON FOOT (H.B.).—Soak foot in hot water, not hot enough for discomfort, and if the swelling appears to contain pus, carefully open it and exude the pus by gentle pressue; then cleanse and anoint with a little healing ointment. If there is no sign of pus, soak in hot water, and then paint with neat whisky; but carefully examine swelling for, say, a splinter or other foreign substance. Put a turf (similar to those given to Larks) in its cage; it will be comfortable for the bird to rest upon under present conditions, and if the green is seeding so much the better. Give it a diet of canary, white millet, also a millet spray, green food, lettuce and seeding (flowery) grass, as soon as you can get untainted by frost. Keep a piece of clean cuttlebone in the cage.

DEAD PARROT (M. Fish).—I regret to hear of your ill-luck. Your bird undoubtedly died from the prostration following importation. A young Grey is always a risky purchase. A Blue-fronted Amazon is handsome, almost as good a talker as the Grey, and much easier to establish; and if you venture on another I advise you to try this species. I should, however, thoroughly, scald out Parrot's cage with boiling water, and leave out of doors (not exposed to wet) to get air and sun into every part. I hope your next venture will have a happier ending.

BLUE-BONNET PARRAKEETS (A Reader).—This species require a seed mixture of one quart each canary and white millet seeds, half a pint each of hemp, oats and sunflower seeds, and a gill of grit (not sand). Also supply such ripe fruit and shelled nuts as they care to take; green food and a dry crust of household bread or piece of plain biscuit. They should have continual access to cuttlebone and water, and be kept in any light and airy, but not draughty position. Can be kept in an outdoor aviary, but cannot be trusted with other species. Very pugnacious.

BREEDING CUTTHROATS (H. E. Young).—(1) No, I do not think it advisable to return the eggs to the nest, the probability is the birds would throw them out or build another nest on top of them. Let them lay another clutch. (2) This is a question I have never tested as you cannot treat foreign species as you would Canaries, but at any rate the earlier eggs (if you chose to interfere with them) should only be removed while the remainder of the clutch is being laid. (3) No, nor yet any advantage by doing so. (4) About on a par, but if anything the Zebras. (4) I rather doubt it, both ways, as the young Zebras have such a peculiar way of backing and turning up their heads sideways while being fed. (6) Crossing White and Grey Java Sparrows gives a free breeding strain, most of the young proving to be pure Grey; fertility is not lessened. (7) Grey Javas are doubtful breeders in a cage. White Javas and Zebra Finches are very probable breeders.

WHAT BIRD? (H. P. Gloyns).—At the moment of going to press I cannot recognise the description you give, and I rather doubt it coming from the Congo district, unless it is quite a young bird in immature plumage. However, I hope to name it for you in our next issue.

COCKATEELS (Mixed Up).—Under the conditions you name I should certainly advise you to get rid of one pair. As the original pair have been separated there would always be trouble, and ultimately one would be killed and the other probably maimed in the conflict. You could keep with the Cockatecls one pair each Green and Yellow Budgerigars, Blue-wing and Madagascar Love-birds, and the series would look well and thrive on the same diet and treatment.

LIST OF BIRDS (Avis).—(a) The list I gave you can be kept in any outdoor aviary all the year round. All you have to do is to provide snug retiring corners, and it would be well to tack over the glass (outside) on the east side of the house, bass matting or felt. (b) I should imagine the Canaries would be alright, but these are not my forte; refer to our Mr. St. John. (c) Rhododendrons are safe. If I remember right, the space you first named was larger than at present; 8ft. by 8ft. would only accommodate about 60 birds at most—for breeding purposes about one-third that number. The arrangements you name should suffice. (d) Yes, but do not include any kind of English Buntings. Hope you'll have luck, but think you would have done better to have adhered to original plan and used the entire end of greenhouse for the aviary, lining the inside with wire netting and putting wire front right across the greenhouse, extending from floor to ridge. Hope I am not confusing you with another correspondent.

POST MORTEMS

Mr. G. Yates, M.R.C.V.S., 1, College Road, Harrow, Middlesex, will examine and report upon dead cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for reply direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis, 21s. Subjects for post mortem examination must be sent packed in a box direct to Mr. Yates, with the fee, this and any accompanying letter being kept from contact with the dead bird. Send by letter-post; it is cheaper and quicker than parcel post. Any bodies sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

A. H. MORGAN (J. W.).—Hen Canary died as the result of metro-peritonitis due to infection from a broken egg in the oviduct.

THOS. JOHNSON.—Stoppage and inflammation of the bowels. I don't know that the moss you mention has any medicinal action, but it would undoubtedly act mechanically in producing impaction of the bowels.

Making Holly Bark Bird Lime.

A New Cage Bird Society for Chopwell and District.

Sir,—A meeting was held by the members of the cage bird section at Chopwell in the Club Hall, when it was decided to form a cage bird society and sever their connection from the Chopwell F.S. Officials were left to be decided on at next meeting, April 20, at 2 p.m., when all members and fanciers are asked to attend. Now, members, get there, and let us try and get something done.

Full Steam Ahead.

Fourteen Eggs Already; Seven in One Lot.

Sir,—I bought a hen Canary haphazard, and I had only had her a week when I paired her with a cock I had bought three weeks before. In the second week of January she had a nest of three eggs. Then she nested again with four eggs, and has reared three healthy birds, and she is now nesting again with seven eggs. Is this not out of the usual track, as I have had dozens in my time, but never knew of a nest of seven eggs before?

Alfred Webster.

[Seven eggs make an unusually large clutch, such as is not often seen, although a number of even larger clutches have been recorded at various times.—Editor.]

The Cage Bird Fancy in New Zealand.

A Statement of Facts so Far as Christchurch is Concerned.

Sir,—In reading your paper of Oct. 14, 1911, I noticed a letter, signed by W. H. Lindley, in which he gives his version of the cage bird Fancy in New Zealand, and as he makes some statements which are slightly contrary to fact I would like, with your kind permission, to show him the error of his ways. Your correspondent's letter is headed, "The Cage Bird Fancy in New Zealand," while as a matter of fact practically the whole is a short story of his adventures in Auckland, one of the towns of New Zealand, where he "astounded" the inhabitants with his knowledge of the washing, benching, etc., of Canaries. It certainly does not say much for the intelligence of the Auckland fanciers, nor yet the knowledge of the old English fanciers who are residents of Auckland, and from whom the majority of the present-day fanciers have sprung. I might remark that I think the Auckland boys were, to use the vernacular, "pulling his leg." Mr. Lindley never visited the South Island of New Zealand, which has some eighteen societies or clubs; he only visited two towns in the North Island, which has seventeen societies, and yet he starts to give your readers an object lesson on the Fancy in New Zealand! He also states that he had the honour of witnessing the first show for the North and South Island championships. So it would have been if such a thing had occurred, but I might state that it never did except in your correspondent's own imaginative brain! Now, sir, I might state that, so far as the Fancy in New Zealand is concerned, it is divided and controlled by two separate bodies—the North Island Association and the South Island Association. There are about eighteen clubs in the South Island, and the South Island championships are competed for at those clubs, and not in the North Island, as our friend would have us believe. The North Island championships are competed for in the North Island, and they have absolutely nothing to do with the South Island. The championships for Canaries last year in the South Island were competed for at Temuka. Our friend also makes mention of the cages. I might inform him that the cage, as used by the Christchurch fanciers for the Yorkshire, is the latest approved pattern, and has been in use here for the last three years. The Norwich cages have wooden sides and top and wire front, built according to the English type. Your correspondent finishes by stating that he was also told by the fanciers that Christchurch was endeavouring to build up a strong society, and it is this statement to which I take the strongest exception, for I claim—and justly, too—that Christchurch is the home of the Fancy. What a pity he did not come to Christchurch! What an opportunity he lost of teaching—or learning! Now, sir, as a matter of fact, the Christchurch Society is the oldest in New Zealand. It was founded in August, 1866, forty-six years ago, and we can give any other society nearly twenty years. We have a membership of 150, and as regards Canaries and other cage birds, we claim to have the most enthusiastic body of fanciers in the Dominion. At our show last June there were 257 Canaries and other birds, which is a record for New Zealand, an increase of fifty over the year 1910—a state of affairs which is due to nothing other than the energy and enthusiasm of the Christchurch Canary fanciers. Yet our friend says we are trying to build up a society in Christchurch! Our meetings are run on modern lines, viz., open meetings, no committee being considered necessary. We have the finest club room in the Dominion—a fact which is admitted without prejudice by all visiting fanciers. One more word in conclusion. Mr. Lindley says that Canary breeding is only in its infancy in New Zealand! I have records before me which show that Canaries were exhibited here over forty years ago. A very big infant, don't you think, Mr. L.? Your correspondent also speaks disparagingly of the type of Canaries he saw when in Auckland and Wellington, a statement which certainly does not reflect very great credit on the fanciers of England, from whom the majority of birds here were imported, and some of them at big figures, too! Now, sir, I trust I have not trespassed on your space to any great extent, but sincerely trust that, in justice to the Christchurch fanciers and your readers at home, you will print these few facts; and should Mr. Lindley at any time return to New Zealand and resolve to favour us with a visit, then I am sure that the Christchurch fanciers will only be too willing to receive lessons from him, if not in the art of washing and exhibiting Canaries, at least in that of self-advertisement. I wish your paper, Cage Birds, every success.

The Barnstaple and North Devon C.B.S.

New Society Formed.

Sir,—This society has been formed with a membership of forty, all fanciers, and a good working and influential committee, consisting of Mr. E. Collins (chairman), Messrs. F. G. Bale, T. A. Blackmore, C. Dart, E. G. Piper, J. W. Copp, G. S. Baker, W. J. Halls, T. Richards, and F. J. Huxtable. Mr. T. Heath has been engaged to judge our first show on Oct. 29 and 30, which promises to be a big success.

The Judging of Quality Linnet Song.

Sir,—In answer to Mr. J. McAllister, my opinion of judging quality singing is that we should go for length, turns, and form, and that judges should give and take according to song. We do not give any preference, as all birds do not break alike. So, in my opinion, it is impossible to give any note best, as two birds can sing the same song and one bird be as musical again as the other, so that it wins on form of song. I think our Lancashire judges can explain to anyone how a bird has sung to win, as we do in Leeds after the contest, like this: No. 1, chattering, scraping, three turns, reeing turned into whinnying, and left it clean; No. 2, scraping, three turns, reeing, turned into stammering, into peeing, into a bad note. The judges would give No. 1 as best, as No. 2 lost a point for a bad note at back of its singing. Then Nos. 3 and 4 each sing the same song, but No. 4 is a better toned bird, so he would beat No. 3 for form of song, having three points to two. The only way I can see to give points is one for each quality note that the bird sings, one for each turn, one for length of song, one for form or style of singing, and count one off for each bad song.

Wm. Sissons.

Sir,—In your last week's issue of Cage Birds I notice Mr. McAllister would like to know if it is possible to have points for the quality song of the Linnet. In my opinion it is quite possible, but, Mr. McAllister, I feel confident the Linnet's song is far better without points. For instance, if there were a certain number of points for each note, judges would have to judge on points, but how many points would one note want? Now this is the question which bothers our friend. Take the note "scraping" (as it is known in Yorkshire) or "scriking" (as it is called in Lancashire); this has seven different ways, viz., sharp, broad, kind, cowing, barking, drakes, and quaking. Scrape should be given 28 points—that is, one point for sharp, two points for broad, three points for kind, etc. If all birds sang in the same voice this would be immense, but some are longer and heavier voiced than others. Therefore it would not be fair to have a standard number of points for each note. Then, again, one bird may end his song with a few harsh notes, etc.; this would mean some points taken off, but how many? The Linnet's song consists of the following notes: Chattering, chowing, reeing, peeing, whinnying, and scraping (see my notes in "Nutshell Series"), but out of these I could gather at least 300 points, and another 100 points could be taken out of his bad notes. If a bird made three turns in chattering of the lightest, that would be six points; likewise three turns in scraping, six points. But we could not put these two notes on a level. I am writing this as plainly as possible so that our friend and others can follow me. If, on reading this, our friend still thinks points would be better, I will endeavour to place a standard number of points for each note in my next letter. I here insert a table by which the comparative merits of English Linnets' song may be tested (the idea I have borrowed from Mons. De Piles in his testing the song of the Linnet):—

Execution.	Compass.	Plaintive.

Points About the Wiring of Cages.

Sir,—Could any reader of your valuable paper tell me how to bend the wires for the top of a Border Fancy show cage, as that is the only difficult point I find in cage making? I make my own wire fronts for box cages, and have heard of a frame for making fronts. Can any reader oblige by informing me through Cage Birds how the frame is made?

A Working Man.

The Dipper's First Appearance on the Show Bench.

Sir,—As no abler writer than myself seems to come forward and express indignation over the letter which lately appeared in your paper re the first appearance of the Dipper on the show bench, may I be allowed to express my disgust and indignation at the conduct of two exhibitors, who, according to the unchallenged statement of Mr. Fishburn, subjected birds caught the previous day to the strange and nerve-destroying experience of a show—and one of the most classic fixtures in the Fancy? Apart from the unsportsmanlike act of showing birds whose presence was a credit to no one for preparation (and that great desideratum, steadiness), the callousness of the thing appals anyone who studies the comfort of his pets in the least. "Some of them died at the shows." So I should think. I am not a sentimentalist, as I have amply proved from time to time in these columns, but ought not some steps to be taken to prevent this sort of thing, if possible? I once remember a similar "pothunter" exhibiting three good Chaffinches in a show I exhibited at, and losing them all. When I condoled with him on what I imagined to be the loss of valued friends, he callously replied: "I didn't lose anything; I only caught them the day before on purpose to show." There is nothing prettier, to my mind, than a tame, well-trained Britisher sitting calm and steady on his perch, even while passed from hand to hand by his admirers. Such a bird, trained by long and patient efforts to entire confidence by an owner whose every spare minute he occupies, is an object of interest to all, and need be the subject of no man's pity; but the exhibition of nervous, fresh-caught birds is a weapon in the hands of the crank, and a sickener to anyone possessing a spark of real love for the birds he shows.

Red Mites a Thing of the Past.

Sir,—No one need get red mites if the following rules are observed. I have bred Canaries for years, and have never seen any. I have been asked by friends how to get rid of them. I tell them I never get any, but will tell them how to prevent getting them. I clean my cages every day whether birds are nesting or not; I wash all trays, well wipe down the cage wires, etc., with a cloth wrung out of hot water, in which have been put a few drops of camphor; I give clean sand daily; and I wash all glasses daily. Twice a week I put a disinfectant in the hot water that perches, etc., are washed in. Perches should be put into very hot water every day. It is a good plan to have two sets, so that there is no waiting for them to dry thoroughly, only change every day. The birds' nests—I like baskets best—I put into hot water and camphor; then I thoroughly dry. Then I sprinkle the stuff for nesting with camphor; putting a lump of camphor under the nest boxes (the flannel, or whatever is used). I bred Canaries for nearly twenty years without insects, so no one need have red mites. The aviaries and cages sometimes sold are badly made; they have so many places where dust can get in. Though liking English-made things, I find the German cages better, as they take to pieces. The plainer the cages the better; they are more easily cleaned. I made a rule when I bought a bird to give it a wash before putting it with my own, as often birds have the insects in their feathers; then keep it a day or two in a cage, giving it baths. When it is all right it can go into the aviary. My aviary, which I had for many years, was a square one, quite plain, only enough mahogany was used to make it strong, but light looking; it was suitable for foreign birds, as the wires were close together. If plenty of clean and hot water, camphor, etc., are used daily, red mites will soon be a thing of the past. Like all other insects, they only come with dust and dirt, or in badly made cages, where plenty of space is left for them to harbour in.

THE SUGGESTED NEW CLASSIFICATION FOR BRITISH BIRDS.

Will it Lead to Chaos, Financial or Otherwise?

Sir,—I am sure that universal approval will be given to the effort of the above Club to do away with the ambiguous terms used in show schedules, and, as a result, to obviate the quandaries in which exhibitors are placed as to the proper entering of their birds and which face the judges when they are awarding prize cards. It would be easy to quote many cases where these doubtful terms have given rise to dissatisfaction. For instance, the cases recently mentioned in your columns of the exhibiting of Wrynecks in different classes in two successive years, and their acceptance in both by the respective judges, may be cited. Any scheme which would obviate such recurrences would be welcome. But does the new scheme do this? The answer is "Yes, when fourteen or more classes are given." In by far the greater majority of shows throughout the country the classification for British birds is not of so extensive a nature as this, and, in its attempt to cater for the smaller classifications, the National British Bird and Mule Club uses some of the very terms which it sets out to avoid. In the cases of nine to thirteen classes the terms "not larger than," "seed-eaters" and "insectivorous" are all used. Is it not possible to avoid this, and, above all, to avoid using such a bird as the Hawfinch as a limit of size? To say "not larger than a Hawfinch" is about as definitive as "not larger than a piece of wood." Everyone knows that scarcely any birds differ so much in point of size as Hawfinches, and almost any other bird than this would be better as a dividing mark between classes. Let us, however, take Class 6 as it stands: "All other species of seed-eaters not larger than a Hawfinch." Out of this arise two questions: What seed-eaters are larger than a Hawfinch? and, if there are any, into which class should they go? A good big Corn Bunting might be considered larger than a Hawfinch, and an especially fine Crossbill might come under the same category. If so, they would be debarred from entry, for there is no class provided for them. It would appear that the words "not larger than a Hawfinch" are entirely unnecessary. The word "seed-eaters" opens the door to any amount of controversy in respect to this class alone. Among the birds eligible in point of size are the Tits, Sparrows, Buntings, and Nuthatch. Some of the Tits are very decidedly seed-eaters, but they are also insectivorous. Sparrows ditto. All the Buntings can be kept on plain canary seed with a few mealworms occasionally. The Nuthatch eats nuts of all kinds as well as insects. Are these birds eligible for Class 6, or should they, or some of them, go into Class 9, "All other species of Insectivorons"? It is evident that the entire classification, as published in your columns, must have entailed a great amount of consideration on the part of the committee of the N.B.B. and M.C., and its members doubtless had something definite in their minds when they compiled the heading to Class 6. It would be interesting to know what this was, for, without some explanation, it would seem that the object of avoiding incorrect entries has not yet been effected. The trouble may be obviated if the headings of two classes in the classification of nine be altered as follows:—For Class 6 read "Hedge, House, and Tree Sparrows. Titmice (seven British species), Nuthatch, Hawfinch, Crossbill, and Buntings (six British species)," and for Class 9 read "All other species in the N.B.B. and M. Club's list." No ambiguous words would then be used, and there would be no question whatever as to the proper class in which any individual birds should be entered.

EXHIBITOR.

P.S.—In the full classification (for thirty classes) there are classes for Siberian Bullfinch and Siberian Goldfinch. The Bullfinches and Goldfinches from Germany and Western Europe, which have in the past been shown sometimes in British classes and sometimes in Continental, seem not to be provided for at all.

Sir,—I have perused with mixed feelings the proposed classification as drawn up by the above club, and I regret that I am not favourably impressed with it. There is too much of the extreme in lumping and isolation, but I will discuss a few of the features to which I take exception, and at the same time take an opportunity of inviting the Scottish B.B. and M.C. to have a try at the problem. I am convinced that the terms "insectivorous" and "granivorous" cannot be deleted without adopting a verbosity which would be out of place in a show schedule, as it practically amounts to naming each species individually, and I feel that a solution to the problem lies in the combination of those terms with migratory and resident, and a judicious insertion of inclusives and exclusives. In Scotland it is customary to bracket the Goldfinch and the Bullfinch together, and a study of show reports convinces me that honours are pretty fairly divided between them, which cannot be said of the class in which Siskin, Twite, Mealy, and Lesser Redpoll are lumped together, a system which, in this new arrangement, would continue in anything up to nineteen classes for British. Now a further study of show reports reveals a tendency on the part of judges to award the prizes in the above order. So well is this recognised by exhibitors that they wisely refrain from entering the last-named, and the owner of the second best Lesser Redpoll in such a class might just as well have thrown his entry and carriage money in the gutter. I would suggest, therefore, that Goldfinch and Bullfinch be bracketed, and thus permit of a separation in the quadruple Siskin, etc., class. I would also make the two classes read thusly, "Siskin or Mealy Redpoll," and "Twite or Lesser Redpoll," as, notwithstanding the fact that by so doing I should be separating the two 'Polls, I feel that the Lesser would be less handicapped in competing with the Twite, as a further study of show reports reveals the fact that the Lesser seldom, if ever, gets first, or the second best Lesser third prize, when competing against Mealies. Apropos of handicapping, this is a point to be evaded as far as the classification allows, yet I see a severe handicap placed on those who enter a bird in Class 26 of the maximum as drawn up, and at the same time an overlap. Thus it is well understood that the hen Starling is much superior to the cock for exhibition, yet anyone has the choice of entering same in Class 15, Starling only, or Class 26, Hen, any other species, except Finch, Bunting, or Song Thrush, thus severely handicapping those species in the latter class which do not possess this sexual peculiarity. I would therefore bracket Starling with Song Thrush, as excluded from Hen classes. Another feature which I fear will not find favour is the bracketing of Greenfinch and Bullfinch, as, apart from the handicap placed on the former, a comparatively sombre coloured species when placed against such a gorgeous species as the Bullie (which is a fair reason for the Goldfinch-Bullfinch amalgamation), we find that the Greenfinch class is generally well filled, while the others are often stuck at six. I have repeatedly seen a combined Goldfinch and Bullfinch class fail to be filled, while two, three, and even four classes allotted to Greenfinches were well filled at the same shows. No, a careful study of this classification convinces me that it will be rejected by every show committee in Scotland. My reason for making such a prophecy is, it is quite apparent that those who drew up such classification have no idea as to the number of species of British birds which appear on the average Scottish show bench, and that arrangement would be quite unworkable from a financial point of view. Take classes from 14 to 24. How many entries would we get in Classes 10, 11, or 12? And the bracketing of Class 8, in which we have the largest seed-eater competing in the same class as the second smallest insectivorous (that is in the fourteen-class scheme would only be equalled in absurdity by giving—as proposed—separate classes for Nightingale, Blackbird, Wagtails, Starlings, etc., which ever the largest show in the world, with a gate in proportion, could not afford to grant. No, I am forced to say that the old method of classification, with all its faults, is preferable to the farcical and financial chaos which would follow the adoption of this scheme. Take again the arrangement for Classes 9 to 13. Class 8 reads "Skylark, Shorelark, Woodlark, Tree, Meadow, or Rock Pipit, Wagtails (five species), Grasshopper or Dartford Warbler, Treecreeper, Redstart, or Black Redstart." Fancy that on a Scotch schedule! But the verbosity is made up for in Class 9, which follows, and in which the vague description is, "All other species of insectivorous not included in the above." That includes Goldcrest, Firecrest, Common Wren, Chough, Jackdaw, and Magpie, all in one class! Then Class 30, which reads "Any species of Continental birds not regularly visiting Great Britain." I certainly should include at least two from Class 19 under that heading, viz., the Golden Oriole and Hoopoe, their visits to Britain being few and far between, and often nolens-volens. Many who have seen nine species of Bunting (exclusive of Yellow) masquerading as British will be wondering what particular five are eligible for Class 12. J. STEELE.

Hybrid Breeding between two British Birds.

By THOS. SMITH (Glasgow).

We come now to the Greenfinch, the commonest of our Finch tribe. His whirring note, as he passes through the air, or when he is on the highest branch of a tree is well-known in the country; and now he is one of the most important factors in hybrid breeding. The progeny from the cock Greenfinch and the hen British Bullfinch is a beautiful Hybrid. When good size can be got he holds his own in competition. I show you now a painting of a cock Greenfinch and a hen British Bullfinch Hybrid which in keen competition won first and special at the Crystal Palace exhibition and wherever he went in search of fame. Other Hybrids from the cock Greenfinch and the hen Siberian Bullfinch have won foremost places at the leading shows.

How Size is Got.

The Siberian certainly imparts size, and size is a strong point in a Greenfinch-Bullfinch hybrid which is intended for the show bench (When a hybrid is hatched and reared it is of course, usually intended for exhibition). I have successfully bred that cross, one year from the British Bullfinch as I have already indicated, and the other from the Siberian. There is no disguising the fact that for some reason or the other the Siberian Bullfinch hen goes oftener "out-of-order" than the Britisher, and frequently succumbs; furthermore the Siberians are now very high in price, if one wants a really handsome hen. Should two or three of them die before the purchaser is suited it means an outlay of three or four pounds. That, however, is a small matter if a breeder can get sixteen hybrids (as we heard of last week in CAGE BIRDS) in a season.

Admittedly not so valuable as those I have alluded to, the Goldfinch-Greenfinch Hybrid is nevertheless an acquisition; he is, as it were, a reproduction of both parents. He has lovely plumage, is possessed of good health and is full of vigour; he is in fact in every way worthy of encouragement at our exhibitions. I believe the cross is easily bred and reared.

A Closer Acquaintance Needed

The Linnet-Bullfinch was at one time a favourite. The Hybrid is nicely marked, and is altogether an attractive show bird. Some years ago he was a regular competitor at Scottish events, but with the arrival of the Goldfinch-Bullie hybrid, the Canary-Bullfinch hybrid, and the Greenfinch-Bullfinch hybrid all competing in the one class, he stands a less chance of getting to the fore-front. He appears either to have disappeared or to be kept at home; at any rate, he is not so well-known, as he used to be. Should a re-classification be arranged for in the schedules of shows, we should then no doubt have the pleasure of making his closer acquaintance.

Improved by Colour-feeding.

The hybrids mentioned above are improved by colour-feeding; in fact, colour-feeding cannot be done without if the birds are to win. Admitted, then, that it is essential we have to consider how the most can be made of it. The subject upon which it is proposed to operate has to be dealt with not only before it enters upon the moult and right through the moult, but for sometime after the moult.

I have never personally had any difficulty in this respect. The plan I adopted was as follows:—Early in the morning I withdrew the seeds, slipped out the seed boxes and returned them about 1 p.m. Naturally the moment the seed was returned the hybrids had a good feed. In that way they had to take the colour food; by and by it was freely partaken of and the trouble was reduced to a minimum.

In 1905 I mixed one lb. of colour-feed, three ounces of the finest sugar and two pennyworth of olive oil. In 1906 I put up one lb. of tasteless colour-feed (Ramsden's) and added one-fifth of hot colour feed but did not include either sugar or oil. Both were mixed with egg food. So far as I remember, the proportions were: One teaspoonful of colour-feed to two teaspoonfuls of egg food. One thing that struck me was that the birds which did not get the olive oil and sugar had far and away the best sheen on their plumage. That I cannot account for, but it was a fact all the same.

During the moulting and so long as the bird is kept for exhibition it should live in a box cage. A hybrid is a vigorous subject, and when housed in an open cage he jumps from side to side and back to front, wasting his feathers and spoiling his general appearance, which we all know affects his chance of winning. I have found a large box cage very suitable.

Siberian Bullfinch hens are the most popular of all cage birds. Orders have to be placed with dealers long before the birds are required. Some orders are executed and some are not, because the demand exceeds the supply.

A fancier well-known to us all (he may be present) in his extreme anxiety to do a large business this season has commissioned ship captains, mates, engineers and sailors and cooks who call at Siberian ports to purchase Siberian hens. Naturally he has been living in dread that so many may arrive that he will be unable to get them all caged or to supply them with seed! The last time I had a conversation with him they had not arrived; the chances are they will remain at liberty for the early part of 1912.

Personally I have a leaning to the Greenfinch-Bullfinch hybrid. He grows and thrives amazingly under the care of attentive foster-parents. A wash or a spray in the early morning puts him in lovely condition. If he wins first and special the owner has a pride in entering the show to see him.

The Goldfinch-Redpoll hybrid is tiny; but he is a very charming fellow. He shows the colouring of both father and mother in a very pronounced way. Colour-feeding has really no effect on his plumage. He should be fed on the natural seeds.

The Classification at Shows.

The present classification for hybrids is faulty. I am strongly of opinion that executives of shows do not give the classification of hybrids the consideration or hybrid breeders the encouragement they merit. Hybrids are a growing class of bird, and it is unfair to compel exhibitors to enter where so many varieties compete. A Greenfinch-Goldfinch hybrid and a Goldfinch-Redpoll hybrid can never hope to win in the same class as Bullfinch hybrids.

Hybrids would be all the better for being classified into at least two classes, say: Canary-Bullfinch, Goldfinch-Bullfineh and Greenfinch-Bullfinch Hybrids; with a separate class for the others. That would be a fair division, and would encourage breeders to enter many specimens that are, under the existing circumstances, left at home depriving societies of revenue and preventing visitors from seeing the full extent of the year's hatching and rearing.

As I have already mentioned, I am very pleased to be with you this evening. I shall be amply rewarded if any of you who have not started Hybrid breeding take up this most interesting of all hobbies. You are favourably situated—your surroundings are fresh and healthy everywhere—and you have only to enter upon the hobby to succeed. I have passed through it, and looking back upon the summer days I spent among the Hybrids, I can safely say they were happy and profitable. I have put them aside, meanwhile, but my son, who is with us to-night, has taken up this branch with spirit. He is working with the Goldfinch, Greenfinch, and British Siberian Bullfinch hens. I thank you for the patient and attentive hearing you have accorded to me on this occasion.

On the Chairman's suggestion, questions were asked and answered. The usual vote of thanks terminated a most enjoyable evening. The meeting was well attended. Mr. Hannah, the working president, occupied the chair, and was supported by Mr. Todd and Mr. McLean, the excellent secretaries.

Wild-Bird Life.

The Shy Bullfinch.

The soft, plaintive note of the Bullfinch can now frequently be heard along the thick hedgerows, and near gardens where fruit trees are at all plentiful. All during the early spring these birds have been a constant source of worry to the fruit grower. If left undisturbed for any length of time, they will soon play havoc with the buds as they begin to expand. There appear to be only the usual methods of shooting, trapping or netting to deal with them. To net any quantity of trees is an expensive and troublesome method, and usually the gardener prefers to have the shot gun handy and deal with the birds in a summary manner. One feels sorry for poor Bullie. Although this destruction of the species only occurs in gardens situated near woods or open fields, in some of these gardens great numbers are destroyed each spring. Bullfinches are not at all gregarious, never consorting in flocks as do some of the other Finches. They love the quiet of the woods and hedgerows surrounding isolated farm-land, where there is little fear of disturbance during the breeding season. These birds have increased greatly during the last few years. Being shy, they are frequently unnoticed; they may be fairly plentiful in a district without more than a specimen or two being seen.

The best place to see them and note their habits is by the side of a small pond or drinking place near the edge of a wood. One will be astonished at the number of Bullfinches that will come to drink in the space of an hour or so, especially if the weather is at all dry and warm.

Now we are in the middle of April we are able to see many changes in the habits of our wild birds. The familiar Robin has gone to the woods to nest, in many cases quite deserting his winter haunts. Blackbirds and Thrushes are busy, their half-finished mud houses being easily located in every likely nook. Of the spring migrants the Chiff-chaff has been with us some time, and his cousin, the Willow Wren, has during the last few days put in an appearance in some of the village gardens, where a few familiar trilling notes may occasionally be heard. The loud-voiced Cuckoo has been recorded, and in some of the more sheltered valleys one or two cock Nightingales, the advance guard of their fellows, have been detected.

Rook Shooting.

Where a Rookery is situated in a sporting country there is sure to be a day set apart for shooting the young birds. This shooting only lasts one day, and does not disturb the parent birds to a great extent. It is said that if this annual shoot does not take place, the Rookery is soon deserted.

The Wagtail's Hunting Grounds.

Starlings love the meadow lands, and seek daily their favourite foods upon the grass. The Wagtail is also a seeker after insects, but prefers to hunt upon uncovered soil for his requirements. Occasionally he will be seen upon the grass, but it is generally later in the season, when flies are fairly plentiful, he leaves the neighbourhood of cattle and may be seen darting around them with considerable agility after insects. No doubt for the same reason he can generally be found in a sheep fold.

Club Reports.

BURSLEM AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

Meeting held April 11th, Barnfields Inn, Mr. R. Smith in chair. Mr. Hawley, of Birches Head, one of the foremost of our local Yorkshire enthusiasts, was down to give us a lecture on the choosing, breeding, rearing, preparing for show, etc., of the Yorkie. We had a fair muster of fanciers. After the lecture, which enlightened us a great deal, each portion being dealt with so minutely, he answered many questions regarding the management, etc., of Yorkshires. After the questions the lecturer was accorded a hearty vote of thanks. Mr. Hawley offered to give us another lecture on some future occasion. Mr. Bate (Stoke-on-Trent) has been appointed judge for our next feather show on June 29th.—L. James, Sec.

LEEDS C.B.S.

Lecture by Mr. W. Richmond on "Breeding and Rearing."

Meeting held at headquarters, March 6th, Mr. H. J. Mennard presiding. Mr. Chew, jun., was elected a member. After the ordinary business Mr. W. Richmond (Rodley) gave us his promised lecture on "Breeding and Rearing." Opening, he informed his audience that for 24 years he had been breeding Canaries, and the first and most important thing of all was to get your birds into good condition. Do not, he said, pamper. Feed on good plain seed, with a little crushed hemp, and after pairing up give egg food every day till the hen has laid her third egg. Do not remove the cock if he behaves himself, for if allowed to remain with the hen he will help to bring up the young brood (if any) and the youngsters will by that reason be stronger and more vigorous. Do not on any account hurry the youngsters from their parents if everything is going on smoothly. Mr. Richmond is no believer in feeding with green food, as he finds that birds that have been fed largely on green food in the nest generally die in the moult; in any case, they are inclined to be weakly. Do not feed on soppy food. When young are about five weeks old pick out those which look like developing into show specimens and cage them off separately. All the surplus put in large flights to moult. Keep a lookout now, for it is just possible an inferior-looking specimen in the nest feather will alter out of all recognition during the moulting process, and make up into an open show winner. When birds are about five weeks old is the most troublesome time; inflammation and other complaints make sad havoc with the numbers if great care is not taken. If you have any like this, give a few drops of quinella in the drinking water.

The lecturer was simply inundated with teasers that had troubled the respective individuals. Needless to say they were answered as only a speaker thoroughly conversant with his subject can do, and our genial Chairman (Mr. Mennard), in proposing a vote of thanks, remarked that the discussion had been of an exceptionally interesting nature. Mr. Chambers seconded, and Mr. Richmond suitably replied.—W. A. Wilson, Hon. Sec.

ASHTON-UNDER-LYNE O.S.

Lecture on Breeding and Management by Mr. W. A. Bladon.

At a meeting held at the club headquarters, the P.S.A. rooms, on April 2, the members were treated to a most instructive and interesting lecture on "Breeding and Management," by Mr. W. A. Bladon (president of the Manchester and Northern Counties O.S.). The lecturer was accompanied by Mr. H. Boothman (secretary of the M. and N.C.O.S.), who helped our members to draw much useful information from Mr. Bladon in the course of the questions and discussion which followed the lecture. Our chairman, Mr. Foxall, in introducing Mr. Bladon, paid him some deserved compliments on his long and useful connection with the Fancy, remarked on his willingness to lend a helping hand to all connected with it, whether it be a society or an individual, and incidentally mentioned that Mr. Bladon had judged the first show held by the members.

"Hobson's Choice" with Many.

Mr. Bladon prefaced his lecture by mentioning the vast amount of information which could now be had through the columns of the Fancy Press, and the difficulty experienced in treating on any subject without repeating much which had already been written, and advised all beginners to study these columns carefully. Proceeding, he first dealt with a suitable room to keep the birds in. With many, he said, it was a case of "Hobson's choice," they having to put up with what the domestic arrangements left available. But if it were possible, he preferred a room with a south-easterly aspect, which would provide a reasonable amount of sunshine and still not get the room over hot during the day—a point of considerable importance during the breeding season.

Various methods of ventilating were touched on, two simple and inexpensive hints being given. Place a board, he said, about three inches wide under the bottom sash of the window, thus allowing a current of air to enter the room through the space between the upper and lower sashes. A board 9 or 12 inches wide fixed to the door frame, or to the face of the door to prevent the door closing, would allow sufficient space at the top of the door to supply ventilation, at the same time preventing risks incurred by leaving the door open in the ordinary way. He advised the use of cages as large and roomy as space would permit, a suitable size being 21ins. long, 18ins. high, 10ins. deep, and he mentioned his preference for single breeding cages.

A Useful Tonic.

For "pairing-up" he placed the cock in a Yorkshire show cage, which was hung on the front of the breeding cage. He believed in allowing the pair to get on good terms before putting the cock in beside the hen. Much fighting meant a loss of energy. He emphasised the necessity of both birds being in tip-top condition before mating, and although not given to, nor in favour of, forcing, said that a useful tonic for backward birds was five drops of tincture of steel in the drinking water. While admitting that early breeding had some advantages provided adequate heating was available, he considered the beginning of April was soon enough to commence operations. Drawing attention to the carelessness of some fanciers regarding the size and shape of their perches, he advised providing them at least half inch wide and ¾in. thick.

Regarding stock birds, quality, not quantity, should be the motto. One decent pair were better than two or three pairs of wasters, were less trouble and more easily fed, results were better, and in the end greater satisfaction was obtained. He advised all purchasers, and particularly beginners, to place themselves unreservedly in a reliable breeder's hands, state their price, and depend entirely on their selection. Regarding the feeding of stock, his advice was to study well the likes and dislikes of the birds, feed on good, sound, but not over-rich food, excepting for special purposes, and seasons, whenever possible allowing what any bird was particularly fond of. He used watercress chiefly by way of green food for the reason that he had difficulty in obtaining any other, also because he considered it a very suitable food, but he believed that lettuce, chickweed, and dandelion could be used with good effect.

In passing, he made special mention of the drinking glasses: there was a necessity for thorough cleanliness in these; personally, he always used a glass cloth after well rinsing, otherwise a slime was found inside the glass, this leading to stomach troubles. Referring to preparations for the breeding season, all should be in readiness by the end of February or beginning of March; sometimes the unexpected happens, and the necessity for being prepared arises. Hens should be in their breeding quarters, comfortably housed by the beginning of February. Gradually bring them into breeding condition by giving small portions of a good mixed seed with an occasional bit of egg-food, about twice a week to start with, then on to three times. Hens, he found, required more attention to get "fit" than the cocks. The cocks' diet should be much the same as the hens', but should not be begun so early. During incubation he feeds hens on plain Spanish only. Egg-food was only given to feed young birds until the fourth day, when green-food and an unlimited supply of hemp seed were allowed. He believed egg-food made with bread crumbs was more nourishing than if made with powdered biscuit, but advised any who were not able to give a little but often, to use biscuits, as egg-food made with bread crumbs became sour sooner.

Egg-binding Due to Weakness.

Treating on egg-binding, the lecturer said he had very little experience of this complaint. Care should be taken that hens are in proper condition before pairing, as he attributed this trouble, also "sweating," to weakness, much of which was brought about by early forcing. He could not say that his experience showed him that inga seed was a preventative to egg-binding. He favoured mutton suet for the hens to peck at. He believed that the causes were weakness added to excessive cold, and to guard against these would prevent this trouble.

The lecturer liked to use a Yorkshire show cage for a nursery cage when the young had to be taken from the parents through plucking, etc., and for three or four days even after they were able to leave the maternal home, until he was certain they were able to do for themselves. He liked to get the young on to plain seed as soon as possible, believing that a great deal of the trouble and death among young birds was caused by giving too much rich food. Drawing a good parallel between young children and young birds, he advised fanciers to treat their "youngsters" on the same reasonable lines as they would treat their children. Re young birds which were given to gorging themselves with water he "stopped their tap." He had great faith in milk-sop for young, and considered it almost an essential food.

Concluding his paper, the lecturer gave some humourous, yet withal sound, advice to married fanciers to enlist the sympathy and help of their "other half." Ladies who took up the Fancy seriously were very often successful. Do not let your hobby be a source of trouble or annoyance to them. Clean up all litter, and, in particular, do not bring seed husks or sawdust out on to the stair carpet.

Questions and Answers.

Questions and discussion being invited by the Chairman, Mr. Bladon was soon bombarded, but all attacks were readily met. Q.: Will cutting the feathers round the vent cause prickly ends which might prevent a perfect pairing? A.: Merely the soft and extreme ends of the feathers should be cut. Q.: Does the hen actually eat the young birds' excreta, and if so does she return it to the young when feeding? A.: Only during the first seven or eight days does the hen clean out the nest, and excreta amounts to small quantity which the hen got rid of before feeding young. Q.: A cure for "sweating" hens. A.: The lecturer confessed his inability to give a certain cure. As stated, he believed it was due to weakness, and here followed a discussion raised by Mr. Boothman as to whether there was such a thing as a "sweating" hen. His contention was that the so-called "sweating" was the loose excreta of the young which had a touch of diarrhœa. Hints thrown out were Epsom salts in the drinker, a suitable tonic for the hen, and a change of rest. Q.: Would gentian placed in the young birds' drinking water prevent them drinking too much. A.: He did not believe in "physicing" young or old birds, but thought the bitter taste would have the tendency to make them drink less. Q.: What treatment did he advise for egg-bound hen? A.: Using a basin of boiling water and holding the hen over it, olive oil if necessary, but not castor oil as suggested by the questioner, as he considered the hen wanted strengthening, and castor oil would have the opposite effect. Q.: Do big perches cause big feet? A.: He never knew of a case of a bird with abnormally large feet, and did not consider big perches would have that effect. Q.: What variety did he consider best for the beginner? A.: Norwich, as there was a plentiful supply, and good classes at shows; they were hardy and prolific, and the surplus could readily be disposed of. Q.: Does the lecturer believe in crushed hemp for young birds after they leave the parents? A.: Did not give crushed hemp, because it soon became decomposed.

Many other points arising out of Mr. Bladon's lecture were touched on, and he ably solved all points raised. A very hearty vote of thanks was accorded the lecturer on the motion of the Secretary, seconded by Mr. Whitehead (Treasurer) to whose shorthand notes I am indebted. Mr. Bladon suitably replied, and thus closed a most interesting evening, much enjoyed by a good muster of about 60, amongst whom were several visiting members from societies in the district.—J. R. Colville, Secretary.

LONDON AND COUNTIES A.C.B.

Meeting held "Earl Cathcart," 39, Osnaburgh St., N.W., and under the presidency of Mr. W. Shakespeare a very good business evening was spent. At our last meeting Mr. E. Pretty promised to present a pair of Canaries to each of the first three new members after that date. It is pleasant to state that we were able to make three new members, and no doubt each has received his birds. In the opinion of several members it is considered advisable to have as many shows as possible, so we have arranged a table show of all varieties on May 4th, when we expect a good number of entries to be judged by Mr. Shakespeare, who has been appointed judge.—A. Mowl, Hon. Sec.

SHEFFIELD C.B.S.

Meeting held April 4th, Wentworth Cafe, Mr. F. Jones (president) in chair, supported by Mr. J. Thorpe (vice-president), and the two secretaries. The society's first ramble of the season (arranged for May 4th) is to Cordwell Valley. Members are requested to meet at Dore Station at 2.30 o'clock. Given a fine day, another treat is in store for us, and fanciers and friends are invited to join us. Decided, that the three highest birds count for point specials at the series of special table shows. The new syllabus which is a great improvement on past ones, was much admired by all. Mr. H. Taylor gave us his lecture on "Breeding and Rearing." Mr. Taylor, who has been a member from the first, was given a warm welcome. He is an authority on the Norwich, and naturally spoke about that variety. He dealt first with the room, himself favouring one facing the south; cages were dealt with in detail; and then the birds. Valuable information was given. Matters relating to pairing, double-buffing, and double yellowing, moulting, colour feeding, preparing for show, and practically every point in the rearing of high-class birds were dealt with. The lecturer spoke without the aid of notes, and for 45 minutes was busy answering questions. A hearty vote of thanks was passed, and Mr. Tow (another old member), in seconding it, spoke of the days when he commenced in the Fancy. He said you could not squeeze a wrinkle out of the old fanciers, and novices ought to be thankful for such men as the lecturer, who came and gave to them knowledge which it had cost much to learn. Mr. G. H. Butler was elected a new member. May meeting: Arrangements for Nest Feather show, and night of questions; fanciers welcomed.—J. Woolhouse, Assist. Sec.

GLASGOW (West End) C.B.C.

Meeting held Co-operative Hall, St. George's Cross, April 12th, Mr. C. Camphell presiding. The services of the following well-known judges have been secured: For F.F. show, all sections, Mr. E. Barron (Glasgow). For annual members' show, Crests and Norwich, Mr. W. Bishop (St. Ninians). Borders and Yorks, Mr. J. Lappin (Rutherglen). Mules, British, and Foreign, Mr. M. Craig (Tollcross). F.F. show, 6th July, and annual members' show, 16th November, both in the Co-operative Hall, St. George's Cross. Business over, the members were treated to a fine lecture on the Yorkshire Canary by Mr. A. Hendry. He said he would just give his personal experience of the Yorkshire Canary, as this was his particular breed. The birds on the show benches last season were inclined to be rather too stout and not to his idea of what show birds should be. He preferred the slimmer bird (as slim as we could get them), but in his opinion we must breed to suit the judges. The principal faults in a Yorkshire were: broad head, crossed wings, drooping tail and broad or fish tail; also birds were winning with frills at some shows; this, too, was a fault which should be looked carefully after. He also advocated, in breeding Yorkshires, to have one variety only, and advises anyone taking up Yorkshires to go to a reliable fancier with good stock and stick to him; then, should he be adding to his stock the following year, he knows what is required and will be able to supply what is really wanted. Also see that the hens are full of quality, as these are the ones to get good birds from, and always bear in mind that type and quality follow the hens, and size and colour the cocks. After several questions had been satisfactorily answered, Mr. Hendry was accorded a very hearty vote of thanks for his interesting lecture.—W. Proudfoot, Sec.

LEYTON AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

Meeting held Grange Park Hall, April 1st, Mr. J. A. Bartlett in chair. There was a good muster of members and friends, including ladies. Secretaries presented balance-sheets for pair and British bird shows, showing a small profit on each. Mr. J. Robson then gave a very interesting and instructive lecture dealing with general management during the breeding season. Mr. Robson strongly advised members not to start too early, as many good hens were lost in this way. He also dealt with the mating of the different varieties, fully explaining the good and bad points. At the conclusion many questions were asked and promptly answered.—Forse and Son, Hon. Secs.

Grewar (Lochgelly); for Borders, Mr. T. Arnott (Kirkcaldy); for British, Mr. J. I. Mackie (Markinch). The judge for Crests was left over meantime, several gentlemen being nominated. Agreed, that there be four classes for unflighted Nor. (yell. cock, buff cock, yell. hen and buff hen). Some conversation ensued regarding the letter which appeared in CAGE BIRDS recently, from a supposed member, and it was agreed that as members can always get any information regarding the Society's affairs from the Secretary or other officials, no good would result from any discussion in the Fancy Press, especially in the case of a member ashamed to sign his name to his letter.—James Kerr, Sec.

BANBRIDGE C.B. AND P.A.

ATTERCLIFFE & DISTRICT C.B.S.

Meeting held April 11th, Horse and Jockey Hotel, when our President, Mr. Havenhand, presided over a very good attendance. Business having been gone through we enrolled two new members, viz., Messrs. J. Merrill and J. Mills. Mr. Watson (local Secretary of CAGE BIRDS LEAGUE) put before his fellow members a few items concerning the League, which resulted in about 14 members giving in their names to join. "Questions and Answers" were then gone into, and the ensuing discussion was greatly enjoyed by all.—W. Hailstones, Sec.

QUEEN'S PARK & DIST. C.B.A.

Mr. J. Dewhurst paid this society a visit at last meeting, and gave a lecture on "British Birds." He started with the Hawfinch and Finches in general, and told us how he fed his birds; also he gave us some very amusing experiences, telling us how he had trained some of his birds to whistle a tune. He also brought in during his lecture the Reed Bunting, Linnet, and Yellow Bunting, giving standard size of, and a few points about, show birds. There was a good muster of members, and a few questions were asked and answered. The evening came to a close all too soon, but I am sure everyone learnt something that will prove useful. A very hearty vote of thanks to the lecturer closed meeting.—W. J. Lethbridge, jun., Sec.

PRESTON O.S.

A Lecture on "Bird Room Management."

A very good attendance of members turned up on April 4. The attraction was Mr. Anderton's promised lecture on "Bird-room Management." It was resolved to apply for patronage of the N.P.C. and G.C.A. clubs; also to provide a trophy to be won outright at the members' F.F. Show for best young bird. Another new member was elected, making 10 new ones this year. There is still plenty of room for more. Mr. Anderton gave what he described as "A chat on Birdy matters, and a few of the difficulties arising during the breeding season, and how he tried to overcome them." His method of making egg-food was as follows: Two or three stale loaves were placed in the oven ever night, after it had been used for cooking, and were then ground up, and stored in a biscuit tin; the egg (boiled 15mins.) was placed in a basin along with as much crumb as was required; then all was simply pounded up together with a strong spoon. This method will be found very simple, clean and quick, certainly new. Amongst other things spoken of were pairing up and good and bad points of Nor. The lecture provoked much discussion and criticism, also plenty of fun. A hearty vote of thanks was moved by Mr. Dent, and carried, after Mr. Anderton had answered numerous questions.—J. P. Leeming (Sec.).

PELTON FELL AND DIST. C.B.S.

Meeting held April 10th, Mr. J. Stanger in chair. Moved and seconded that we hold our third open annual show as usual. Moved, that we hold our nest feather show on July 26th, and that schedule of last year do again. Following were nominated as judges: Messrs. W. Reid, J. Risborough, H. Wilson, W. Butler, T. Dixon and R. W. Mole—to select from next meeting. Moved, that we again ask Mr. J. W. Taylor, M.P., to be President. Two new members enrolled (Messrs. Forster and E. J. Hedley, of Chester-le-Street). Carried, that all members "local" form Committee. Auditors for 1912: Messrs. J. H. Elliot and J. McDonald. We invite all cage bird fanciers (any radius) to join us; we are one of the oldest clubs in the North. Subs., 5s. per year, with 1s. entrance. Wm. Forster, Sec.

Eight new members were elected. The annual contest was fixed for January 17 and 18, 1913, and it was agreed that patronage be again given to the Bradford Cinderella show.—A. Percival, Hon. Sec.

NORTHERN BORDER & S.F.C.C.

Meeting held April 1st at 65, Grainger-street, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Mr. Smith in chair. Correspondence was read regarding patronage, but it was decided to leave this over until next meeting. Decided to hold a series of table shows. A pair of dressed beast horns were presented, also a medal to be won at the table shows. Members and fanciers are requested to note that we are changing our meeting place for a better and more comfortable room at Pillar's Cafe, Pink-lane, Newcastle-on-Tyne, opposite the Central Railway Station. Following new members elected: Messrs. Robson, Chapman, Campbell, Pape, Brown, and J. E. Atkinson.—M. C. Potts, Sec.

SITTINGBOURNE C.B.S.

Meeting held April 1st at George Hotel. There was also a show of British birds, when 30 were staged. Mr. H. F. Ambrose judged. Principal winners:—T. Attwood, H. Olive, W. Broadbridge, G. Grant, E. Stevens, G. Bushey. Judging competition held afterwards, for which there was a good entry. First prize B. Tidy; second, F. Gifford; third, T. Attwood. Decided, to hold annual ramble June 2nd, the district to be visited being the same as last year, namely, Milsted and Torry Hill. One new member, Mr. Moore, was admitted, and it was announced that Mr. E. Smith had kindly offered a special prize for most points gained during season for foreign birds.—B. Tidy, Sec.

MIDDLESEX O.S.

At meeting held 4th April it was decided to have two young stock shows, one in June, and one in August, and a members' show on 31st October. Mr. T. H. Fletcher has kindly presented society with a rose bowl, and Mr. J. R. Higgins a silver medal, both of which are to be won outright this year. The bowl is to become the property of the member gaining most points at the above-mentioned three shows, and the medal to runner-up. Also decided to purchase seven silver spoons, two to be won at each of the Y.S. shows, and three to be competed for at the members' show. We are to have a lecture at next meeting, 2nd May, when all fanciers will be heartily welcomed. The membership is steadily increasing. Members please note, a silver medal is to be given to the one inducing most fanciers to join this year; Mr. Fletcher, who is giving this medal, is not himself competing.—Jeffery Jefferis, Sec., 10, Western Road, Southall.

SOUTH BIRMINGHAM O.S.

Meeting held April 10, Sydenham Hotel. Vice-chairman Hughes presided, 30 being present. Young bird show business was dealt with. Classes and rules remain the same, with the exception that the price of entry per bird is raised to 9d., and a very important rule was passed, viz., "That where two fanciers or more reside at the same address, and one comes under the description of champion as per rule for the shows, the other fanciers will have to show in the champion section." In the discussion on the adjourned proposition of Mr. Jones re cups, it was decided to let this remain over until some future date, the majority of members voting against having any appeal at all. Messrs. W. G. Poole (Stratford-on-Avon) and J. H. Roe were elected judges for the Wednesday evening and Saturday shows respectively. This will give all members a chance to put a good number of birds down. In response to the appeal for specials no less than 14 were promised besides the premier prize of a handsome tea service for competition at the two shows; other specials are still coming to hand. Secretary hopes all will try and offer some small special for the next show on the Saturday evening. The president intends to open the show, so we hope the old birds will do their best for us, and throw a few good ones. Secretary will lay a paper before the May meeting, "On the estimated cost of holding a Midland Counties' show in November," and see what the members think of this idea. It should appeal to all the Midlanders, as we intend to cater for the tryers who breed Canaries for the love of the game.—J. Sheppard, Sec.

SCOTTISH NATIONAL C.B.S.

At the general and other meetings held so far this year there was a splendid attendance. A very fine spirit of good feeling existed, which augurs well for the success of the Society. Everyone present has entered on the year's work with the determination to make this exhibition not only a great public attraction, but an assured financial success. We therefore cordially invite those members who could not be present to join with us in accomplishing this object, and we also extend a special invitation to all fanciers to associate themselves with the Scottish National—"The Palace of Scotland." The officials elected are:—President, Mr. James Winter (Edinburgh); Vice Pres., Mr. Simpson Buglas (Edinburgh); Sec. and Treas., J. R. Meikle, 51, Lothian Road, Edinburgh; Show Manager, Mr. R. It has been decided to increase the Scotch Fancy classes from 4 to 14. These classes have shown a considerable deficit this last year or two; we anticipate, therefore, having splendid support as a recompense for this action. The following well-known experts will judge: Messrs. J. A. Stewart (Glasgow), J. Carson (East Houses), J. D. Maxwell (Laurieston), and D. Black (Govan). The Belgian classes increased from 2 to 3, and will be judged by Mr. J. F. Dewar (Edinburgh), also an expert in this variety. Prize money, 35s. per class, with the exception of extra stock class. FALKIRK (Good Intent) C.B.A.

Meeting held Oddfellows' Hall, March 30. Business, appointing judges for shows. Mr. J. Marshall has consented to give a washing exhibition at our next meeting on April 27. A new member was admitted (Mr. W. Walker).—W. Clarkson, Sec.

S. SHIELDS, N. SHIELDS C.B.S.

Meeting held April 6, at Cyprus Hotel, Mr. Thompson in chair. There was a grand turn out of members. Subjects discussed brought on long and heated debates, and the meeting was declared by all to be one of the best ever held. Messrs. Bates, Fail, and News, elected members. All new members joining have all privileges of the old ones, novices being specially catered for at all shows. Anyone wishing to join kindly communicate with me. Messrs. J. Wilcock and F. Marwood will judge our show in October.—W. L. Smith, Sec., 3, Queen Street, S. Shields.

COLINTON AND CURRIE PARISHES O.S.

Monthly meeting held Drill Hall, Juniper Green, April 6, Mr. Begbie chair. Mr. J. Daily was admitted a member. Mr. Mitchell (Juniper Green) was present, and offered a cup for competition, which was heartily accepted by the chairman, and the donor heartily cheered hy the members. The classification for our annual show, to be held in the Drill Hall, on Nov. was drawn up as follows: Scotch Fancies 4 classes, Borders 8, Nor. 4, Brit. 1, Mules 1, A.O.V. 1. A number of prominent fanciers were then proposed as judges, and the secretary instructed to write them in turn. Members were reminded that next meeting is on May 4, the meeting for booking hens.—J. Napier, Sec.

DULWICH AND PECKHAM C.B.S.

Meeting held headquarters April 2nd. Unfortunately Mr. A. J. A. Marley was not able to he present and deliver his promised lecture on British birds. This, however, he has promised to deliver on May 7. The evening was profitably spent as a question night. Mr. F. Cole in chair. Each member present was asked to write his or her question on a piece of paper; the questions were placed in a hat and mixed up; each member drew one question, which he or she was expected to answer. All did their level best to answer the questions put, and much useful information and discussion was the result. Mr. F. Cole took an active part in the discussion, and the many novice members present have to thank him for valuable information. In this way a most interesting and instructive evening was spent.—W. Hodson, Hon. Sec.

WALKLEY AND DIST. C.B.S.

Meeting held April 11th, St. Philip's Mission Room, Mr. T. Rldal in chair, supported by G. H. Butler and the two secretaries. We are sorry to report it was not very well patronised, only about 30 being present. We should have liked a crowded room, this night being the one of the season, viz., a lecture by Mr. J. A. Woodall on the Norwich Canary. And a very able lecture it was. The lecturer dealt with what kind of stock to buy, how to pair up, his methods of feeding and colour-feeding; in fact, everything, not a point being missed—an hour's delight to both old and young fanciers. At the close questions were asked and answered. Every member had some point to ask. At the conclusion a vote of thanks was proposed by Mr. Hogan and seconded by Mr. Lawton; it was supported by the Secretary. Other business done: Alteration of June meeting night to save clashing with the Sheffield Society, several members remarking that the giving seemed to be all on the part of the Walkley Society. Eventually it was decided that we alter ours to the first Thursday in June, which is a table show. Please note.—C. Tomlinson, Sec.

Buchanan; vice-president, Mr. G. Fulton; secretary and treasurer, Mr. J. J. Mellwain. The show will be held on 14th September. Secretary goes forward with the assurance that all Scotch Fancy breeders in and around Glasgow will rally round this old Association and make the show a huge success. There will be three prizes in each class, and specials galore. Tickets are now in the hands of printer, and will be issued in a few days; any overlooked, please write me.—J. J. McIlwain, Hon. Sec. and Treas., School House, Mount Florida.

SCOTTISH METROPOLITAN (Open Derby) O.A.

Additional list of members:—Messrs. J. Anderson (Lochgelly), A. Wilkie (Glencraig), A. Bell and McPhail (Liberton), J. Greig and Greig, junr. (Aberdeen), W. Lees and W. Wilson (Glasgow), D. We thank those who have been successful in adding some new members, and hope all others who have extra membership tickets for disposal will use their influence in a similar way—thus helping to make a record year in membership. There are over 500 tickets out to be accounted for. We will esteem it a favour if fanciers will send on their replies, favourable or otherwise, at the earliest possible, thus saving considerable postages on recall notices, which must he issued soon. Closing date for joining, May 31, is near at hand. Join and support this populer Scotch Fancy and Belgian Association, for the exhibition of young birds bred 1912; your membership will be highly appreciated by the Executive and Committee.—C. R. Drysdale, Esq., Hon. Pres.; W. Thornton, Esq., Hon. Vice-Pres.; I. R. Melkle, Secretary, 51, Lothian Road, Edinburgh.

LONDON C.B.A.

Meeting held April 10, at The Feathers, Gt. Chapel Street, Westminster, S.W., Mr. R. L. Crisp, president, in chair. After the usual business, Mr. J. Robson opened a most interesting discussion on difficulties in the breeding-room, and the following gentlemen ably assisted in the debate:—Messrs. R. L. Crisp, F. Easterling, P. Rorke, E. J. Whittome, J. Hodder, T. Goymer, E. French, W. H. Mugford, W. H. Cook, J. W. Wright, F. Smith, W. A. Shepherd, C. C. Offord, J. Dewhurst, A. J. Slade, F. Boxall, and T. L. Sayer. Subjects arising during debate: Unfertile eggs, pairing too early, influence of hen or cock in breeding out bad faults, judicious pairing, nervous hens, immature cocks, feeding young, feeding for size, green food, egg binding, addled eggs, plucking, birds going light, sweating hens, non-feeding hens, frills, cross wings, dropped and wide tails in Yorkshires, etc. A hearty vote of thanks to Mr. Robson closed the debate. Presentation of prizes, consisting of 4 handsome silver-plated teapots hy the president, these being point prizes for the last three shows, the successful winners being Messrs. J. Hawes, T. Hart, W. H. Mugford, and E. C. Offord. Three similar teapots were kindly given for competition, the generous donors being Messrs. R. L. Crisp, W. H. Mugford, and W. A. Shepherd. A unanimous vote of thanks was accorded the donors. Messrs. Crisp and Mugford replied. Messrs. Scudder, and T. L. Sayer were nominated for membership. A vote of thanks to the chairman closed an instructive and pleasant evening. Members and friends please note: Mr. E. J. Lamb will lecture at our next meeting, May 8, on Hybrid Breeding.—W. H. Mugford, Hon. Sec., F. Knight, Assist. Sec.

SHEFFIELD O.S.

"A glorious success" was the unanimous opinion of the 70 members and friends at the meeting held "Rose and Crown," April 2nd. The only drawback was the absence of the Chairman, Mr. T. Dawn, who had unfortunately met with an accident during the day at his employment. The Vice-Chairman (Mr. J. Woodall) presided. This meeting was, as was anticipated, a treat for all. A table show of British birds (3 classes) was held. We mustered about 26 entries—on the whole a good deal better class of exhibits than a lot of all-England shows can boast. Friend Chick had no easy task to find the winning birds. After the announcement of awards, Mr. H. J. Chick invited questions and criticism on his judging. This was freely entered into, after which he proceeded with his lecture on "Keeping, feeding, and preparing British birds for exhibition." This was one of the best lectures ever given. The lecturer went into every detail. He strongly advised the fancier to get a thorough knowledge of the species he intended to keep. Get into touch, he said, with some catchers or dealers, and have the first pick of the stock. Of course, he would naturally expect to have to pay a little more for his birds, but any fancier would willingly do that so long as he got hold of the right stuff. Mr. Chick pointed out what strong points to look for and what faults to avoid; the manner of feeding, the best way to keep them in show condition, washing for exhibition, etc. A hearty vote of thanks was proposed by Mr. Fletcher, and seconded by Mr. P. Walsh. The lecturer himself spent such an enjoyable evening that he has promised to come over from Nottingham for our next meeting, May 7th, when the chief item is a table show of Foreign birds; judge, E. E. Smith, Esq., and lecture on Foreign birds by the same gentleman. Fanciers and friends invited.—J. A. T. Woodall, Press Correspondent.

BLACKPOOL AND FYLDE R.C.C.

Meeting held at Raikes Hotel, Blackpool, April 2, when four new members were proposed and elected. Mr. Tomlinson kindly brought six birds, and explained the different tours as they sang, which was very much appreciated by those who were new to the Fancy. Next meeting May 7th, at Raikes Hotel, when prospective members will be welcomed.

OLDHAM AND DISTRICT C.B.A.

At meeting held April 9th it was decided to hold our back end show Nov. 2nd. Also moved and seconded that next meeting should be the last night for nomination of Mules for back end show. So, fanciers, kindly turn up with your nominations. I inadvertently stated in my last announcement that a ramble was to be held on March 26th; this should have read May 26th.—J. Cope, Sec.

WEST OF SCOTLAND O.S.

Meeting, April 6th. There was a good turnout of members. Mr. G. Smart presided. Secretary intimated that the following gentlemen had agreed to act as judges at annual show: Crests and Plainheads—Mr. J. Smeaton (Musselburgh), Borders and Yorks, Mr. W. Haddon (Hamilton), British and Foreign, Mr. R. V. Raine (Cathcart). Members were treated to a lecture on the Norwich Plainhead by Mr R H. Livingstone, who dealt with his subject in a very able manner, and at the close, after various questions had been ably answered, he was accorded a hearty vote of thanks. Messrs. Jackson and D. Whitelaw (Govan), and T. Milroy (Glasgow) were elected members.—W. Hutchinson, Sec.

CHELTENHAM C.B.S.

An important meeting was held at the Prince of Wales Hotel, April 3rd, to decide upon the change of headquarters, necessitated by alterations at our late rendezvous. Resolved, to transfer to the Prince of Wales Hotel, where good rooms are available for members' shows and meetings. Arrangements were made for the table show of British birds and judging competition at next meeting; five classes were fixed up, and Mr. Hamlin appointed judge. The members, who had turned up in large numbers, then settled down to hear a paper on Hybrid breeding by Mr. G. Stevens, who had gone to an infinite amount of trouble in preparing an extremely interesting and instructive paper on that most delightful but elusive branch of aviculture. Last year Mr. Stevens gave us a paper on the Canary and British crosses, so on this occasion confined his remarks to the British crosses. A vote of thanks to the lecturer was passed.—A. S. Treasure.

BRADFORD EAST O.S.

A good muster of members, along with their wives and friends, took part in the annual Easter ramble to Harden on April 8th, and although the conditions were boisterous in the extreme, it proved a most enjoyable outing. The members were prevented from carrying out their original idea of going to Grassington, the trains being curtailed on account of the coal strike, so many of the members (who annually make this excursion with a view to collecting moss for the breeding season) will this time have to look elsewhere to replenish their stock of nesting material. A start was made from Town Hall Square at 2 o'clock and the party went by car to Allerton, and then took the fields to Harden Beck; thus we caught the full force of the gale that was blowing, and it was hard work plodding on at all hereabouts, but the ladies stuck to their guns and eventually we had a well-earned rest in the cosy little village of Harden, where tea was served and thoroughly enjoyed by all. The return was made through Wilsden, back again to Allerton, and the party reached home about 8 o'clock, after a good afternoon's ramble through field and country.—H. Hill, Sec.

ANFIELD, EVERTON C.B.S.

A Lecture on Green Canaries.

Meeting held April 8th, St. Cuthbert Schoolrooms, Burleigh Road, North Robson Street, Liverpool. Owing to its being Bank Holiday the attendance was not large. Mr. G. Rawsthorne (Vice-Chairman) presided. The lecture down for hearing by Mr. S. Hadwiu was unavoidably postponed through that gentleman being suddenly called away on important business. Mr. G. Bell very kindly filled the breech with a most edifying lecture on Greens. He exhibited the plates on what constituted the Yorkshire Green 20 years ago, and what was required to-day by fanciers showing this kind of Canary if they wished to catch the judge's eye and be successful. Mr. Bell believes in 25 per cent. of cinnamon blood being introduced on the hen's side to produce that sound body colour and fine texture of feather with distinct markings, Green being the foundation and fountain of colour in all varieties of Canaries. Decided to hold a night show of British at Schoolrooms, April 22nd. Classes: Goldfinch, Bullfinch, Chaffinch, Greenfinch, Bramblefinch, Linnet, Mule and Hybrid, A.O.V., Softbill, Hardhill. Judge, Mr. W. Walker. Also a judging competition. Members and those intending to join are asked to bring as many birds as possible. 7.30 to 8 p.m. Judging commences at 9 p.m. There will be free admission to this show, which is expected to be a good one, as 18 or 20 members have requested it to be promoted. Badges are being provided for every member. There is a divided opinion on the closed ring question. This subject will again be discussed at next meeting. Membership cards and syllabus are to be had from the Secretary. Again I would remind fanciers that our cups and medals will be on view at the nest feather show, July 15th, and intending members must take care to join before that date to be eligible to compete for same. Anyone joining after that date will be eligible to compete for prize money only. So, fanciers, don't leave it too late, as this rule will be strictly adhered to. All members will be considered novices this season only.—R. B. Wright, Hon. Sec.

A. A. A. A. A. A. A. A.

"A" comes first in the alphabet, and with those who keep foreign birds, Avadavats should come first, for their beauty, grace, vivacity, confiding demeanour and readiness to adapt themselves to the conditions of cage or aviary life, merit them this distinction. Learn all about them from "Nutshell" No. 16, "Avadavats." It's by Wesley T. Page, a specialist in foreign birds, 2½d. post free, from the Publisher, 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

AN ORNITHOLOGICAL ODDITY.

[By H. Goodchild.

This Toucan is one of the most remarkable birds in the world, grotesque in its shape and its mannerisms, and gorgeous in its plumage. It is shown in three "positions": asleep; in a dignified daylight pose; and in a state of expectancy, as when its eye catches sight of a banana. Further notes will be found on page 392.

CANARIES
IN CAGE AND AVIARY

By John Robson, and other Leading Bird Specialists.

Edited by S. H. LEWER, of "The Feathered World," "Bird Life," etc.

With Magnificently Coloured Plates showing every known variety.

GOOD REASONS WHY

Complete in One Volume. Delivered for 1/- First Payment.

YOU should own this sound NEW Work on Canaries.

Because it tells you how to make a success of your birds; how to select them; how to feed and treat them; how to breed from them, and if you go in for valuable specimens—how to dress, trim and wash them for Exhibitions, and how to care for them at the Shows.

This book tells you when to mate your Canaries, when to breed, when to feed, when to doctor them and when to let them alone; when to strengthen your stock and when to weed out the poorer birds; when to buy and when to sell.

There is an Index of some 600 items in which you can turn up in an instant any point relating to your birds on which you need guidance. At the same time the sections are written by such genuine bird lovers and fanciers, that they prove interesting reading for anyone who knows something about Canaries and Cage Birds, and who opens these pages at random and reads right on.

This book is so well planned, each section begins so admirably at the beginnings of the subjects or processes it deals with, that many an owner of only one or two birds will be led—directly through the ownership of this authoritative work—into the delightful hobby of Canary Breeding.

"Canaries, Hybrids and British Birds" is the newest and the fullest work now on the market that deals with the Breeding of Canaries. It gives the results of years of patient experiment on the part of specialists in this difficult business, and embodies directions and rules for success that have never before been published.

of priceless information. Such is the matter in "Nutshells" 25 and 26, which cover the whole of the groundwork so far as softbills are concerned. There are certain materials indispensable for the proper keeping of the more delicate of the insectivorous birds. What these are, "Nutshell" No. 25 tells you, and afterwards goes very fully into a very important subject—hand-rearing. The author, H. J. Fulljames then describes all the favourite varieties in a delightfully clear and helpful manner, showing which best repay the care spent upon them. It is safe to say that everything that is anything is dealt with in one or the other of the booklets, and readers will not be long in picking up the hints. Notice! The breeding of mealworms is described and instructions as to the gathering of ants' eggs given. For the most complete instruction on British softbills, and the foods and appliances needful, if they are to be kept in perfect health, get "Nutshells" 25 and 26, post free, 5d. the two, from The Publisher, 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

Read the following:— 24, Tanera Crescent, Wellington, New Zealand, March, 1912.—I received the birds in splendid condition. They are simply marvellous after travelling 13,000 odd miles. I am perfectly delighted with them. I thank you very much for your genuine honesty in dealing with me, and wish good luck to Amber Thorn.—John Ford to Joe Thomas.

2, Lime Street, Gorseinon, 18th April, 1912.—I am very pleased indeed with the last pair of Norwich I had from you. I have three youngsters now on the perch. Please send the following. . .—J. Hooper to Joe Thomas.

5, Acres Rd., Alton, Hants, 18th April, 1912.—The Yorkshires arrived here in fine form. I think they are marvellous value.—W. W. Chubb to Joe Thomas.

108, Mount Collyer St., Belfast, 19th April, 1912.—The bird arrived quite safe to-day, and I am delighted with him. Although he had travelled from your place to Belfast, he seemed in the best of form. He began singing immediately, and I think the Irish air must have been good for him, as he has entirely forgotten to stop. During the 40 minutes I was at home at dinnertime, his mouth never closed. —W. T. Cotter to J. Thomas.

The above are typical of hundreds of letters I have received during the last two or three weeks, and which are filed for your inspection. The point I wish to emphasise, however, is that I give an absolute guarantee to give you the same satisfaction.

so as to detect when any of your Rollers are going wrong. How can you detect anything wrong? You don't know? Well, you ought to, for your lack of knowledge will be disastrous to the singing powers of your birds. "Nutshell" No. 10 gives you this knowledge, and if you don't get it, it will be a case of "penny wise and pound foolish." Which bird promises to be good with hollow roll, bell-roll, bass-roll, and Koller? How do you cure a bird of noisiness? What are the best training methods and the best preparation for contest singing? For answers to these great questions in Roller Canarydom, and also full particulars as to correct keeping and breeding, get "Nutshell" No. 10, "The Roller Canary," 2½d. post free, from "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

"THOUGH a freely imported bird (it may be purchased for the modest half-crown) when writing of foreign birds in all their glowing tropical beauty, the Pekin Nightingale is in the very front rank . . . the ideal cage and aviary bird." Thus writes Wesley T. Page, F.Z.S., in "Nutshell" No. 19, "The Pekin Nightingale." He goes on to show how this charming bird can be managed and bred in captivity, giving full particulars as to its treatment at every stage of its existence; post free 2½d., from the Publisher, 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C.

NOTICE! To those about to buy a Grey Parrot. There are many points to look for when making your purchase, ways of telling at a glance in what state of health the bird is. Though it is difficult to distinguish sex, there are means. The Grey Parrot is a delicate bird, and the feeding of a newly-imported specimen is therefore a matter of the utmost importance. Then, the Parrot acclimatised, care with its general diet is very needful; there are many foods which it will readily eat, but which must be rigidly avoided. With due care you can make a grand talker of a "Grey," and quickly, too, if you know how. What is a common mistake which Parrot lovers make? The answer to this question, and to every other concerning the keeping of this popular bird in health and condition will be found in "Nutshell" No. 17, "The Grey Parrot," by Wesley T. Page; post free 2½d., from the Publisher, 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C.

CHEAP, CHARMING FOREIGNERS.

Such, in short, are Budgerigars, which are among the most beautiful and lively of man's feathered pets. The breeding of "Budgies" is a work of patience, but, owing to the possibilities in the production of varieties, it is very profitable. Difficulties there are in the way, many and serious, but they can be overcome. Food, and the construction of cage and aviary are very important items. Full particulars as to proper feeding, caging and management in captivity, with hints on sexing, breeding, moulting and exhibiting will be found in "Nutshell" No. 18, "The Budgerigar," post free 2½, from CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C.

Page, in "Nutshell" No. 20, along with all the other hints necessary, if you would be successful in keeping and breeding these lively and vivacious pets; post free 2½d., from the Publisher, 154, Fleet-st., London, E.C.

Pigeons in Italy.

Three kinds of pigeons are found in Italy. They are the same three which are known in England as the Wood Pigeon, Stock Dove, and Rock Dove. Of these the Rock Dove is the most plentiful, and habitually breeds there. The others pass over the country on migration, and seldom stay.

Semi-domesticated Moorhens.

Moorhens appear among us in a state of semi-domestication, frequenting our farm ponds and ornamental waters, and strutting across the lawn and the garden walks. In spite of this apparent tameness, their nest is frequently so well concealed that it is difficult to locate, and as for taking a snapshot of a sitting bird, only those who have attempted the feat know how difficult the task is.

Sparrow's Strange Nesting Site.

A new fancy of the Sparrow as a nesting site is a tramway standard. Two families have made their nests on the ornamental ironwork of a standard opposite the cemetery in Intake Road, Sheffield. It would be difficult for them to have discovered a more uncomfortable spot, for the nests are only within a few feet of the electric wires and the noise of the whirring wheels of the trolley.

CAGE BIRDS LEAGUE

One Meaning of the Word "Cruelty."

OPPRESSIVE APPLICATION OF THE NEW ACT.

NOTES BY THE SECRETARY.

EZRA, Esq., London; MARCUS BLAKEMORE, Esq., Sunninghill; Vice-Presidents: Mrs. M. B. PARTRIDGE, Worthing; Miss C. M. E. HILL, Exeter; H. D. ASHLEY, Esq., M.A., F.Z.S., M.B.O.U., Newbury, C. E. RAVEN, Esq., Nottingham; LADY ROMNEY, Esq., Oporto; MAURICE AMSLER, Esq., M.B., Eton; MALCOLM ROBERTS, Esq., M.A., Baron's Court; E. BAKER Esq., Cowes.

How the New Act Is Being Stretched.

Although from the beginning to the end of the new Protection of Animals Act not a word is said as to its being an offence under the Act to omit to clean out regularly and frequently cages in which birds are being kept, yet the officials of the R.S.P.C.A., in their zeal to obtain convictions, are applying for summonses against any bird-shop keeper who may, in their opinion, be keeping his stock in cages which are not scrupulously clean. As will be seen from the report published in another column, summonses are not only granted in such cases, but it is being held that anything short of absolute perfection of cleanliness constitutes neglect which may be construed as cruelty under the Act. While deprecating to the full the keeping of birds in any other than cleanly circumstances, I certainly think that the new Act is being unduly stretched. The case reported this week shows the drastic methods which are being used by the officials of the Society, and bird shop-keepers can only protect themselves against prosecution by seeing that the state of their cages does not give excuse for such oppressive action.

"Drew Birch" Again.

The writer of the extraordinary conglomeration to which I referred last week has seen fit to favour the editors of one or two papers with what he evidently considers a knock-down blow to myself. I am reluctant to take up space with such matter, and unless "Drew Birch" has something more practical to say than anything we have yet heard from him (or her), I shall not after this week mention the subject. Below is the second letter from the writer in question, together with a copy of a reply which I have sent to the newspapers in which the letter has appeared.

The Destruction and Captivity of Wild Birds.

Sir,—Your correspondent Henry Fulljames addresses a letter to me in your issue of 16th inst. Permit me to reply. Mr. Fulljames says the trapping of English wild birds is legal only for a few months in the year. This statement is wrong. It is illegal only for a few months. In the States it is illegal all the year. Henry Fulljames utterly betrays and contradicts himself. He asks me in derision has a bird power of retrogressive reflection, and then he admits it has by saying he could tell of unlimited cases in which birds have refused liberty after having learned the comforts of shelter and food in captivity. The fact that it spends all its time looking for lost liberty shows the faculty of memory so strongly evident in other creatures also, such as the dog, elephant, etc. Henry Fulljames says the Creator or "Mother Nature," as he calls Him, is so notoriously cruel and has such absurd ideas of the birds' comforts that he (Henry Fulljames) must really come to their aid and take them out of His cruel hands, and lock them up in jail. The whole purport of his letter is to show that freedom and liberty is a decided disadvantage, and the people and animals best off and happiest are those confined in jails, away from mother nature's cruelties, where you have nothing to worry about except liberty, all food stuffs supplied. Let Henry Fulljames remember that life for man, beast, and bird is associated with perils in the sea, perils in the city, and perils among false brethren, and if his logic applied to birds it would apply to men also. He talks about catering for the birds' happiness. If the birds could talk they would tell him he is careful to avoid having any of the "hill of fare" for himself he writes for them. Where the Spirit of the Lord is there is liberty—2nd Corinthians, iii., 17.

DREW BIRCH.

Helen's Bay, County Down.
April 18th, 1912.

Our Reply.

Sir,—I should not have troubled you again in this matter but for the direct contradiction by your correspondent "Drew Birch" of my statement that the trapping of wild birds is legal in England only for a few months in the year. "Drew Birch" says bluntly "this statement is wrong," so I ask your permission to support its truth. Under the various Acts of Parliament, beginning with the Act of 1880—"An Act to Amend the Laws relating to the protection of Wild Birds," the taking of any wild birds is prohibited between the end of February and the beginning of August. There are, therefore, five clear months in the year when it is illegal to take a wild bird of any kind whatever in any part of England. In each separate county this close time is extended at the discretion of the local County Council, which has only to apply to one of the Secretaries of State in order to get existing Acts extended to any amount. The extension for the county of Middlesex may be fairly taken as an example of local alterations and additions. In the first place the close time is there extended so as to be between the end of January and the beginning of September, a period of seven months out of the twelve. In addition, in respect of a large number of birds, including practically every species which is ever kept in a cage, the close time is further extended to cover the whole of the year absolutely.

Your correspondent would do well to make himself acquainted with the elementary facts in regard to the bird laws rather than make random accusations of inaccuracy on the part of others. The County of Middlesex has not been arbitrarily chosen in support of my statement. Any other county might equally well have been taken; some of them go much further in the way of prohibiting the catching of wild birds.

"Drew Birch" has perverted my letter from start to finish, allowing his prejudices to run away with his discretion, and it would be easy to answer his second communication word for word. My contention is that the keeping of a bird in captivity does not necessarily imply cruelty. A properly cared-for bird is perfectly happy in captivity, he forgets that he has ever been free, has no recollection of a past life, and no thought of a future, and such sentimentalists as "Drew Birch" in conjuring up pictures of "slow mental and physical torture," in comparing the lot of a well-kept pet bird with that of a convict sentenced to solitary imprisonment for life, in screaming that the keeper of a bird is guilty of cruelty "which cries to God for vengeance," in calling upon the nation to "rise in anger and raise its voice against this barbarity," and so on, are only using hysterics to expose the fact that they are totally unacquainted with the true facts in relation to a hobby which affords innocent instruction and recreation to thousands upon thousands of their fellow men.

Taking it that the address given in your issue of 19th inst will find your correspondent, I have sent him (or her) a copy of the leaflet to which I referred in my last. If "Drew Birch" cares to attempt to controvert any of the statements therein made I shall be glad to support them either in direct correspondence or publicly.

Wild-Bird Life.

First Broods.

The fine weather, with bright sunshine, is all in favour of the birds that are nesting, and these are now fairly plentiful. Some species have already brought off a first brood, and occasionally one may see young Thrushes, Hedge Sparrows, and Robins. The latter appear such interesting little mites. They are so unlike their parents in plumage, that the novice may be forgiven for not recognising them, although their habits and gait are quite Robin-like. The Tits appear to be nesting unusually early this season. The young are curious-looking creatures, and particularly strong in the legs and claws. The writer located a nest of young Greater Tits in a hole in an old tree; the hand could just be inserted into the hole, although it was a tight squeeze. Wishing to count the occupants he drew them out one at a time, and placed them on the upright trunk of the tree where they clung quite easily and could only be removed by force. In doing this one is almost afraid of injuring them, they cling so tightly. Young Swallows and Swifts will do the same, although hardly so strongly as the Tits.

Along the hedgerows one now hears the well-known call note, which sounds something like "whit" of the warblers. Of course, they are not very plentiful yet, but such sounds, with an occasional passing glance of a small bird diving into the nearest thicket, make one think summer cannot be far distant. A single Martin has been observed by the writer in his district; this was on the 12th of the month; he was only seen for part of the day, and up to the time of writing, no others have appeared, and he evidently has sought other quarters.

Readers who are fortunate enough to possess fairly large gardens can do much to entice birds to nest in them. All they need is a few suitable nesting boxes, evergreens and bushes, and one must prevent them being disturbed by any sudden noises. A pair of Missel Thrushes are now nesting a few feet from the ground near a stable, and a much frequented walk in a garden in the centre of a Surrey village—proof of what can be done even with birds of a wild habit of life. No notice has been taken of them by the owner of the garden, and they have consequently become as trustful as Robins.

The Young Naturalist.

Jackdaw as a Scholar.

In the little village of Upton, in Berkshire, there is a twelve-year-old boy who has so trained a Jackdaw that he can take it to school with him, and the bird will sit upon his desk during lessons. None of the other boys take any notice of this strange scholar, so used have they got to its presence.—Taken from "Tit-Bits" and Sent by Robert Birch (aged 11), 83, Sandy Lane, Skelmersdale.

Rook Chivalry.

A lady writes this incident to the "Daily News":—We feed the birds and always have water for them, and lately a poor maimed Rook has been coming with the others. He has lost one leg altogether, and the other hangs limply and useless. The poor thing was on the lawn with three others. The three drank and two flew away. The one that remained bowed his head near the ground several times and walked around the cripple as if in doubt. Then he carefully put one of his wings under the cripple's wing and dragged and supported him to the water. He dipped his beak in and dropped some water into the cripple's mouth to show where the water was, so that he could reach it himself.—Sent by Kitty Evans (aged 12), Penyrheol, Skewen, near Neath, Glam.

*The Tame Yellowhammer

The other day my father let a Yellowhammer go out of the aviary. But instead of flying away it flew round and round the aviary and tried to get in again. It then sat on the trees for a time, and as it seemed hungry we gave it a little seed, which it came down on the ground for and ate. It stayed about the place all day until evening, and as it was very tame we thought the cats would get it, so father put a trap cage out, and after a little while it went in. We took it into the house and kept it until morning, and again let it go in the garden. It still keeps around the aviary, and we feed it every morning.—Alice Garner (aged 12), Bamnold, Waterbeach, Cambs.

*A Grateful Greenfinch.

A gentleman living in Leith is in the habit of feeding the birds which frequent his garden during the winter months. Some time in January 1911 he enticed a Greenfinch to enter a cage, and so captured it. It was wearing a ring on its leg marked "Aberdeen University, 7185." In the following March he set it at liberty. He was much surprised this year when the bird returned. On its cage being presented to it, the Finch hopped contentedly into it, and settled comfortably down for the severe season.—Sent by Nellie McCreary (aged eight years), 11, Harlescott Road, Waverley Park, S.E., and taken from the "Evening News."

Conviction at Blackburn Under the New Act.

The first case taken in Blackburn under the new Act was heard on April 17, when Richard Haworth, a well-known bird dealer, of Blakey Moor, Blackburn, was summoned for causing unnecessary suffering to eight Canaries by not giving them proper attention. The prosecution was conducted by Mr. Radcliffe, solicitor, on behalf of the R.S.P.C.A., and an inspector of that society, a police constable, and a Corporation sanitary inspector gave evidence that some of the cages containing the birds in defendant's shop window were in a dirty condition. Mr. Radcliffe said that defendant, if convicted, was liable to a penalty of £25 for each bird.

Mr. J. W. Carter, the defendant's solicitor said a new statute like this could easily be made an oppressive weapon if not carefully administered. The Act was not intended to punish men for not cleaning out their bird cages with strict regularity; but to prevent birds and animals from being made to suffer. —Defendant stated in evidence that he cleaned out his cages once a week, and they had been attended to just a week previous to the day on which the officers called at his shop. He had won numerous prizes, including some at the Crystal Palace, and had always kept his birds healthy.—Several well-known fanciers stated that once a week was quite sufficient for cleaning out the cages, and testified to the healthy condition of the defendant's birds. The bench considered there had been neglect, and ordered the defendant to pay costs.—"Manchester Evening News."

Blackbird Takes in Washing.

A curious instance of a Blackbird's nice taste in nesting material is reported at Alloa. Several collars that had been laid out to bleach on a green at a local villa mysteriously disappeared, and for a time no trace of their whereabouts could be found. Eventually the missing articles were discovered, forming part of a nest built by a Blackbird in the ivy on an adjacent wall.

OBITUARY.

Mr. JAS. THOMSON (Leith).

Mr. C. R. Drysdale (Edinburgh) writes: I regret to announce the death of Mr. James Thomson, weighing machine maker, Leith, late secretary and treasurer of the old Leith Club and Open Society, a member of the old Edinburgh Society and Midlothian Derby, at all of whose shows he had many successful wins, including a Derby win. He was an enthusiastic breeder of the Scotch Fancy Canary. Since he retired from the Fancy he always found time to visit the local shows and have a chat with his old friends, who were delighted to see him. He was of an exceptionally cheery disposition. The interment took place at Warriston cemetery, Edinburgh, on April 12th, and Messrs. W. Thornton, J. Dalgleish, D. Brown, A. Patterson, W. Carson, and C. R. Drysdale were present.

Mr. R. G. FRENCH (Newsham).

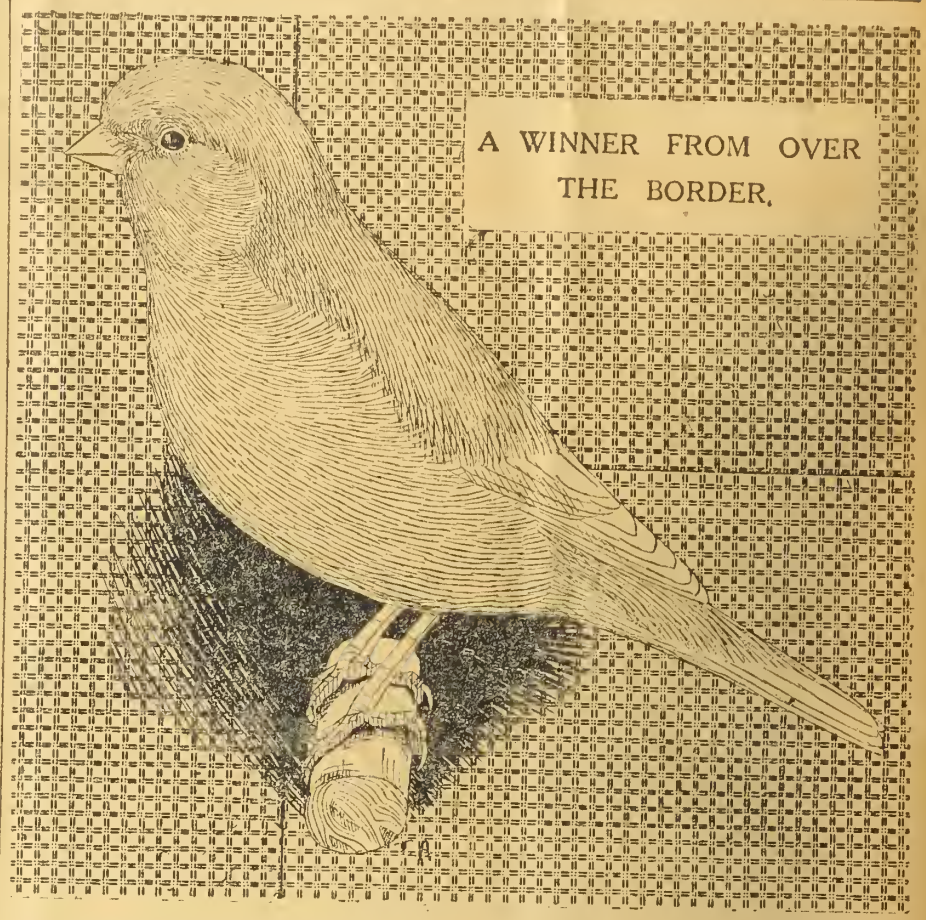
It is with great regret we have to notify the death of Mr. R. G. French, of the Willow Tree Hotel, Newsham, at the age of 37 years, writes Mr. C. Snowdon, Sec. of the Newsham C.B.C. Mr. French was a fancier of Norwich, and a successful exhibitor, member of Newcastle, Blyth, and Choppington Societies, and for upwards of seven years held the position of treasurer of the Newsham C.B.C. He leaves a widow and two children, to whom the deepest sympathy of fellow-fanciers is extended.

Hatched at Fifteenth Day.

I have had two nests of four eggs so far this season, writes Mr. F. J. Whibley (Maidstone). One lot was clear, but the others, am glad to say, are good, or were good, but I was in a hurry to take them away, and broke two at the 15th day, one containing a dead chick, the other a live one, which, of course, never lived long after. The other two eggs hatched, and the young ones at present are doing fine, being 5 days old. The other hen is again on a nest of 5; am hoping for better luck this time from her.

Hoopoe Shot in Salop.

It is regrettable to hear, on authority of the "Oswestry Advertiser," that a fine specimen of the Hoopoe was shot near Ellesmere, in the Oteley Estate on the 13th inst. The writer who communicates the account to our contemporary says: "It is a pity that this bird's conspicuous appearance should lead so often to its destruction, as there is apparently no reason why it should not be a regular summer visitant, to at least our southern counties, in some of which it has undoubtedly bred." It is a further pity that the man with the gun is not held responsible.



The Unflighted Buff Norwich Plainhead Cock which secured First Prize at the Scottish National Show for Mr. T. S. Mabon (Kelso.)

We have in the past had the pleasant experience of inspecting many huge bundles of complimentary letters sent to that world-renowned bird specialist, Mr. W. Rudd, of Norwich, but we really think that the bundle received from him this week surpasses all records. The huge pile comprises letters from all quarters of the British Isles, and several from foreign parts, conveying the thanks of customers for the birds or goods received from Mr. Rudd, and the fair manner of their treatment. All these letters, we note, bear postmarks of quite recent date, and that he should have received them in the course of a few weeks, speaks volumes for the huge business Mr. Rudd does.

Record Canary Breeding.

Readers may remember I wrote a short article last year on "How I reared my Canaries," writes Miss L. M. Nicholls (Mitcham). Well, as I stated, I hatched 14 birds out of 14 eggs, and only one bird died, and strange to say, the remaining 13 turned out to be cocks. I sold them all, but know the pople that bought them, and they are delighted with them, they are all such good songsters. Also I should like to tell you my young birds this year were on the perches at 15 days' old, and are now three weeks and all strong and healthy.

Will it be a Great Bird Year?

Naturalists will scarcely parallel the "events" of last week-end, says the "Daily Mail." The visiting birds all appeared together in a complete and united invasion. Swallows, Cuckoos, and Nightingales, the most popular of the many arrivals, are also the most obvious. On Sunday night the Nightingales were singing in Hertfordshire with the fullest gusto. No doubt the extraordinary beauty of these spring nights has added to the unusual perfection of the song. Swallows appeared in considerable numbers on Saturday; the Cuckoos have been singing their major third for several days; and the commons are crowded with Chiffchaffs and Willow-Warblers. Probably every single species of the summer visitors, with two possible exceptions, is now represented in England, though not half were here last week. Even the Turtle Dove, which is usually timed for May, has been seen in the South. The thoroughness of the invasion of the pioneer force gives ground for hope that this ideal spring is the opening of a great bird year.

OUR FRONTISPIECE.

A Talk about Toucans.

There are some curious creatures in the bird world as in most others, and the Toucans must rank among the most curious. There are about sixty species of these extraordinary looking birds, and they are all distinguished by a beak which looks much too heavy for them to carry with comfort. Appearances, however, are deceptive, for a Toucan's beak is light in the extreme, although capable of inflicting a very nasty dig if the bird is angry.

A Toucan at rest is perhaps even a more comical object than a Toucan awake, for it sleeps with its enormous bill turned backwards, and hidden in the plumage of its back, while its tail is tilted up at a most impossible angle. In most of the species the bill in life is gorgeously coloured in various tints of green, crimson and yellow, but these colours fade after death, and in stuffed specimens the bill is always artificially painted in an ineffective attempt to indicate the beautiful living colours. The gape of the enormous bill extends backward to under the eye of the bird, and the bare patches around the eyes, ornamented generally with various bright tintings, add considerably to the eccentric appearance of the bird. The plumage is generally gorgeous in the extreme, red, yellow, and green as a rule constituting the throat and body colours, while the back and wings are mostly a metallic green or black.

The Toucans are natives of the northern part of South America, Mexico, and Central America, and many of the species have been seen on the show-bench. In nature they are arboreal in their habits, and in captivity they keep mostly to the perches, hopping from the one to the other with a comical if clumsy motion. They may be kept quite easily upon a diet of fruits of various kinds according to season, grapes, currants, sultanas, nothing seems to come amiss, while the ever convenient banana will always serve as a staple food in the absence of anything else. Grubs of any kind will be greatly relished, and they will make short work of a mouse or a young bird if they have the chance.

If the trouble of constant cleaning out be not considered an objection a Toucan may be recommended as a desirable pet. It will soon develop an affection for its owner, and will display an intelligence such as is shown by a Magpie or Jackdaw. If song is a desideratum one must not look to a Toucan for it—its only note is a most discordant yelp of which it seems inordinately proud. Of course a very large cage is indispensable to its proper keeping. The draw bottom is better made of zinc rather than wood and should be covered deeply with sawdust.

EXPERIMENTS IN THE BREEDING OF FAMOUS SONG BIRDS

By J. JEFFREY (Harborne, B'ham.)

The writer holds that the breeding of birds such as the Thrush or Nightingale is a by no means difficult problem.

EVERYONE is familiar with the old adage, "Fine Feathers Make Fine Birds." But how seldom do we find in the bird world the combination of gorgeous plumage and melodious song! This is a very striking factor in connection with our British songsters. We cannot boast of very much grandeur in the plumage of our birds (except in that of the Kingfisher), but we can boast of the possession of some of the finest songsters that the world produces. Take, for instance, the Nightingale, Skylark, Blackcap, Garden Warbler, Jenny Wren, and last, but not least, Song Thrush. A more soberly-clad sextet it would be difficult to find, but in vocal power I venture to say they come second to none. What a melodious combination!

How is it, then, that in these advanced avicultural days, so few people take up the breeding of these beautiful songsters? True, the cost of their keep is a trifle more than that of seed eaters. But to my mind you get far better returns. There is always a demand for a really good bird of any of the above-named species, and, what is more, there is no comparison in the quality of their song with that of the Goldfinch or Linnet.

A Large Outlay Not Essential.

A great many people run away with the idea that it requires an elaborately-built aviary in which to carry out breeding operations; but this is not so. It can be done in a very moderate-sized aviary in almost any back-yard where it is possible to grow a few ferns or other plants. The former will grow almost anywhere, and are hardy; and a good bushy root of ferns is a capital adornment for a small aviary of Softbills. I have found it answer well, and to thrive where other plants would not grow.

I have myself bred the Robin, Skylark, and Thrush in a very small aviary at the first attempt, and on very simple lines; although the Nightingale and Garden Warbler certainly had more room. I have never attempted to breed with the Blackcap or Jenny Wren, but I am quite convinced the former would be easily accomplished. I have some doubts as regards the Wren, because the natural diet of these birds is of such an intricate nature, consisting of spiders' eggs and all kinds of insect larvæ, for which it seeks most persistently under the roots of old hedge-rows, around cow sheds, barns, thatched houses, and in fact, in every conceivable hole and corner where it is possible for insects to crawl. Ants' eggs would, therefore, be the nearest approach to their natural diet, and I am very doubtful if there would be sufficient nutriment in the dried ants' eggs to rear the young of so small a bird. The thing would, I fancy, only be possible when fresh (live) English ants' eggs were available. I hope to give it a fair trial.

"Bobbie" Puts His Master to Rout.

I will now tell you how I succeeded in breeding my Robins. This was the very first Softbill I attempted to breed. First of all I obtained two hand-reared specimens, and both turned out to be cocks. One I gave to a friend, and the other became a great pet. He was always ready for a good fight. Alighting on my one hand, I had only to commence teasing him by pulling his toe or tail or wing feathers, and he would fight me for all he was worth, and pinch right hard too. I have carried him up the garden in this position many a time. If he flew away to a tree or rail, I had only to shake my hand at him, and he was back again in a moment. But later on he developed the notion of dashing at my face and striking me, so I had to be on my guard, as it was not only unpleasant, but dangerous to my eyes.

As the spring began to approach, I determined to catch a hen. This I did, and placed the couple in a good-sized cage. But Master Bobbie "set about her" in such earnest that I had to part them. After a while I transferred them to a cage with a wire partition down the centre; and in a few weeks' time the cock began to carry bits of food about in his mouth. Evidently the hen had not, however, forgotten the thrashing he had given her, for she would have none of it. And so they went on till the beginning of April, when I set to work to construct an aviary on a simple scale outside the back kitchen door, making use of the space between the door and the window to form a back. The sides were 5 feet wide by 5 feet 6 inches high, and the front 3 feet 6 inches wide. A remnant of oilcloth was nailed on top (this is much better, to my mind, than the felting commonly used)

Cats were very numerous, and I felt sure that no bird would be safe unless properly protected, not only from the claws of the cats, but from their glaring eyes at night, sufficient of itself to frighten the life out of any bird. So I decided to make my frames out of 3 inch wood ¾-inch thick. These were put together, and half-inch mesh wire placed on the one side and 1 inch wire netting on the other. In between these two nettings I inserted roller blinds made with a cheap grey calico; these were drawn every night at sunset, so that the birds were well sheltered and quite secure from outside attacks.

The flight of any aviary built on these lines, will, I am quite sure, prove a great success. Many fanciers little think of the worry and fright to their pets during the night from, perhaps, half-a-dozen different cats; and this is the cause of many a fancier being unsuccessful.

THE NIGHTINGALE AT HOME.

An interesting photograph by Mr. Stanley Crook of a Nightingale at the edge of its nest amongst the leaves and undergrowth at the foot of the tree.

My next venture was with the Skylarks—two hand-reared specimens, which went to nest quite readily. The aviary this time was put in a corner, so that I had only a side and front to make, which I did on exactly the same lines as the Robins' aviary.

The first nest contained four eggs. The hen (a young bird) made very little attempt to build a nest. The ground being very dry, she made a hole in the far corner, and carried a few roots and bents into the same. Then she laid her first egg. She commenced sitting after the third egg was laid, but appeared very restive all through the period of incubation; you had only to look through the wires, and she was off. No doubt, had there been a fern to hide her somewhat, things would have been different. The consequence was, no eggs hatched out, although there was a chick in every one.

No sooner had the eggs been taken away than she went to nest again in the very same place. Five eggs were laid and duly hatched, the young being successfully reared on English ants' eggs. I believe they would have reared four or five nests had they been allowed to do so; but the room was wanted, and I had to disturb them.

I never anticipated rearing the Song Thrush, but one season I had a very fine hand-reared bird, exceptionally tame. It was quite early in spring when a friend asked me to look at one which he had reared the previous season, but which had never sung. This I did, and pronounced it to be a hen. He said if it were any good

A PARROT'S CURIOUS TROUBLE.

A photograph of an extraordinary occurrence, the upper mandible of this bird having grown to an enormous length and become twisted in its growth to the shape of a ram's horn to me I could take it. I did so, and turned it and my own Thrush into a good-sized aviary. I took very little notice of them, except to give them plenty of earth-worms dug out of the garden. But to my complete surprise I discovered a nest built in a laurel bush and containing eggs. No attention whatever was paid to the birds, except to feed them, and three young ones were successfully hatched and reared. Earth worms formed the principal diet; I used to dig these up in the garden and place them in an iron bowl for the purpose. I should like to say here that slugs, snails, earth-worms and caterpillars are the natural food for Thrushes, and if people would feed caged specimens more after this fashion, instead of giving them crushed hemp and bread, they would get far better results, both as regards plumage and song.

A Glutton Amongst Softbills.

Now came my turn to try breeding conclusions with the Garden Warbler. I had more trouble with these birds than with any others, but more on account of their feeding than their breeding idiosyncrasies. Of all the gluttonous birds, I think this species will come out "top sides" with any of the Softbills. For several years I reared a nest with a view to breeding, but time after time I lost one or the other through their getting so fat. There is no doubt that Garden Warblers in their natural state are great fruit-eaters, and if you wish to keep them in health, you must give them as much fruit as possible in their diet—black and red currants, elderberries, wild raspberries, strawberries and bilberries. I used to gather the elderberries in bunches and hang them over a string in the driest room I could find (but not over gas), and in this way they would gradually dry. (To be continued.)

MULE BREEDING MADE EASY.

REV. F. RICHARDS
(Manchester).

The writer declares for methods he terms "unorthodox" and which make mule-breeding easy for all.

I WILL endeavour to pass on my own experiences, without reserve, for the benefit and encouragement of new beginners in the fascinating pastime of Hybrid breeding. What I am about to relate may seem very strange, and will certainly not be in accordance with the orthodox methods. One is consoled by being in the fashion; to be "heterodox" in these days is supposed to indicate movement and progress. The writer draws from the experiences of nearly twelve years—years devoted exclusively to Mule breeding, during which period he has bred nearly 200 Mules, chiefly Goldfinch-Canary, brown Linnet and Canary, and (last season) Greenfinch and Canary.

The stock birds are kept in a room, ranged on one side—not higher from the floor than breast-high. The room is also the owner's working den, and he occupies his chair several hours every day; consequently he has had ample opportunity of studying the habits of the birds very minutely.

The Elusive Clear.

Who has not bred variegated Mules, and tried scores of various hen Canaries and all kinds of Goldfinches (peathroat) buff, yellow, large, small, and early in season, late in season, August and September—with the result not a single clear Mule? If one were so fortunate as to breed a Clear this next season, how many sovereigns would one require to balance the account of years standing for hens, Finches, etc.? Methinks £20 would not square the debit side of our ledger. The writer knows two gentlemen, very well-known fanciers, who have been trying, one for much longer than himself, and the other for 27 years, and the first clear Mule has yet to make its arrival. May we be forgiven for almost thinking that the Clear is just one of Nature's wonderful freaks.

THE YOUNG CANARIES' FOSTER MOTHER.

Mrs. W. Rolfe (Hoxton) is here seen hand-feeding two Canaries whose mother had tired of her duties and left her babies to starve.

Mule Breeding is Quite Easy.

The next point is: It is quite easy for any bird lover successfully to breed Mules. This statement may cause some to stare and exclaim: "No, that is not true; I've tried and failed, and I know others who have never been able to breed a Goldfinch and Canary Mule," etc. Still, I adhere to my statement, and furthermore declare it to be as easy to breed Mules as to breed Canaries. If you want Mules, however, do not put your couples together through the winter, or early in February. The writer's advice is, don't put your hen Canaries and Finches together at all then. Why should you? Think one moment. Do Canary fanciers run their pairs together through the winter? Do they pair up in January or February? No, certainly not. Is it not a "dictum" in Canarydom, that the man who puts up his Canaries before they are in breeding condition is simply courting failure? Do we not constantly read answers to correspondents who want to know why the hen does not build and lay eggs? Or, why the two birds quarrel so much? Or, why eggs are laid but prove unfertile? And is not the answer (and the correct one) general that the birds have been put together before they were ready, or the cock was in breeding condition, but not the hen, or vice versa?

If two birds who form a natural pair (as Canaries) are not expected to breed unless both are ready, how can fanciers expect success with two birds of opposite tastes, and possessing no natural or mutual attraction one for the other: if they adopt methods so entirely different, as the methods generally advised for muling are? If the Canary hen and Goldfinch are run together through the winter, or put up early in February or March, what happens? First, it is not possible, or certainly not advisable, to feed the one as freely as the other. What happens if the hen Canary comes into condition before the Finch? Either quarrels, or unfertile eggs. What if the Finch becomes fresh before the hen? More disagreement, and probably a dislike arises that tells its tale through that season.

Again, if the pair formed a certain amount of attachment, and when the season arrives the hen is ready, but not the Finch, another Finch introduced would lead to trouble, or vice versa. It is well known that the brown Linnet once attached cannot easily be made to transfer his affections.

Two Remarkable Examples.

The writer's advice is, keep your cock Finches separate, and feed them as required. No two birds are alike in nature or disposition. If you have several Finches you will find that though you treat them alike, one will come into condition long before the others. Some you cannot get into "rank trim" until well on in the season, and by that time you have had one or two "clear nests," and, disheartened, you abandon the effort for Mules, when it was perhaps the case that all the time you had in your possession one Finch that would have filled all your eggs, if only you had known it. Let me give you one or two examples.

In the season 1910-11 I had a Goldfinch cock in full breeding condition, who took a fancy to a Bullfinch hen, and paired to her on many occasions, but this same Finch would not look at a Canary hen; he was so rough that I had to remove him on every occasion attempted. I had another Goldfinch that successfully filled eggs with five or six hens. For example, on July 13th, 1910, a breeder of high-class Norwich was removing into another part of the city ,and, of course, had to suspend all his bird-breeding operations. He had a yellow Norwich hen—with her second nest of young 19 days old—also one marked yellow hen untried. I persuaded him to lend me the two hens, and within 14 days those two hens in a strange room went to nest, also one of my own. The three hens laid within a day or two of each other—four eggs each—and twelve young Goldfinch Mules were the result. My friend's hens had never seen the Finch before, but they wanted to nest. The Finch also wanted to pair. And there you have the whole secret.

Where "Mormons" are required.

Don't let Finch or Brown Linnet become attached to any one hen, then, if in condition and the hen calls, the Finch cannot help himself. The result is, that after a few trials the Finch seems to know what is required, and readily becomes a confirmed Mormon, which really spells success in Mule breeding. A quarrel at such times is immaterial.

If your hen is ready and building a nest, place the Finch in the cage at dusk; hang a cock Canary close by, and in the early hours of the morning the cock will sing to the hen, and the hen will call for his attention. If the Finch will not "deputise," then he is not ready. If ready, he will answer the mysterious call of nature, though he and the hen may fight furiously afterwards. What matters that, if you get a clutch of full eggs?

Once start your Finch, and, failing accidents, you are right for the season. I have changed hens and Finches every season for years, and have never been without plenty of Mules—all bred in a cold room. Last December I purchased some Greypates. One of the Pates came into condition in January, and was filling eggs in February. Last season one hen was put to a brown Linnet, but not being quite satisfied, I also ran in the Goldfinch. Result—Goldfinch and Canary and brown Linnet and Canary Mules in the same nest.

One season a friend asked me to procure him a Goldfinch. One day during the season I heard a Goldfinch on song hanging outside a small tobacconist's shop, and could detect the breeding "chuckle." Upon entering the shop and asking the price, I bought the bird for 6s. 6d., and within half an hour after entering my room, that Finch had paired with one hen twice. I took the bird to my friend. My hen went to nest, laid four eggs, and hatched and reared four nice dark Mules. The Finch lived four or five years, and bred literally scores of Mules.

One more example: in the month of June I once bought a German Roller hen, and cage for 3s. Upon examining the hen I discovered she was fully ripe. Placing her in a breeding cage, and taking a Goldfinch that was putting a hen to nest in another cage, I slipped him in with the new hen. I borrowed a German Roller cock Canary from my next-door neighbour, and took him into my room. Within ten minutes this Bird was singing, the hen called for pairing, and the Finch paired. She went to nest. I placed him with her one more night, and from that hen I reared eight Mules after the month of June.

Vinaceous Fire Finches, charming little African birds, form the subject of No. 24 of the New Series by this popular author and aviculturist.

"THAT'S a true word," enthusiastically exclaimed Mr. Gotty. "Where I've bin before, I don't want nobody to show me the way. Where I ain't bin, I'm willin' to be took, and by them as 'ave. I ain't like some people, too ignorant to be learned what they don't know." I admire Mr. Gotty immensely, and have had many a good laugh over his odd sayings; so when one day I read that accord ing to Mr. Pycraft Vinaceous Finches are admirable pets, I determined to have some, not being too ignorant to be "learned."

That year I went up to London. We country clergy always go to London for our hard-earned holidays, because we like to see a few live people about. Was it not a bishop who wrote to one of his country clergy suggesting a "quiet day," and got the unexpected answer: "My lord, what we want here is not a 'quiet day' but an earthquake." While in town I always go down East the very first day, to see what I can find in the shape of out-of-the-way birds. I am generally disappointed, by the bye, but this time I was in luck's way; for on visiting a certain shop I happened to arrive just at the same time as the big cases of Waxbills from Marseilles. Of course, I waited to see them opened, and on looking through them I saw about half-a-dozen little Waxbills of which I did not know anything at the time, beyond the fact that I had never seen or possessed them before.

He lectures his wife across the breakfast-table concerning the profits they are going to make from bird-keeping.

They were the loveliest little birds I had ever seen, and in the most beautiful condition; and I determined that they should be mine, cost what they might.

The shopkeeper did not seem to set any great store by them. I suppose dealers get blasé; he merely said that he generally got a few in each consignment with the ordinary common Firefinches, and that if I liked I could have the lot at seven and sixpence the pair. I closed, for fear he should alter his mind.

A Brief Description of the Species.

I might as well here try to give a brief description of their appearance. Happily it is quite easy to tell the cocks from the hens; so that you are sure of getting pairs. They are about the same size as the ordinary Red Firefinch. The cock has a greyish crown, and beautiful black cheek pieces, while the whole of the body is a lovely claret colour, turning to brown on the flights, and deepening in intensity on the tail; the back is sloe colour. The breast is finely dotted all over with little white spots like pin heads. The hen is finer altogether, and has not the black check patch.

I was fortunate enough one year to get quite a big lot of these lovely little creatures from Dr. Hopkinson, of Brighton, who used to bring them over himself, so that I have had great opportunities of studying them. I gave Dr. Hopkinson considerably more for his birds; I think, as far as I remember, he charged me £1 the pair; and I paid it cheerfully.

When I got my consignment from Brighton it was February. Like Cardinal Newman, I love February in some ways.

Not because it is best,
But because it is first,
And is pledge of the rest.

From an avicultural point of view, however, I detest it. You never know what will happen to the birds, especially the newly imported ones. I was surprised to see on opening the travelling cage from Brighton, that in spite of the long journey from Sussex to Yorkshire, the Firefinches were perfectly tight and sprightly, and I felt it augured well for their ability to live. Of bird keeping one may say, as Napoleon said of war: "Eh! bien, c'est un grand jeu; belle occupation"; but do not say anything about the cost.

An Awkward Fence.

When that cage arrived from Brighton, I was asked by the "powers that be" what it contained, and the cost. This was an awkward fence; so I answered airily, "Oh, it is only some little African Finches." In this world, although deceptions are welcomed everywhere, it is only on certain conditions, one of which is that they must be carried through with a high hand.

Always bear this in mind when a new importation comes to hand. If you begin talking about rarity there will be trouble directly; because the home circle soon connects rareness and high prices together. If you only talk in a general sort of way of little African Finches, the interest seems to drop. If I had said that those little Finches cost 20s. the pair, I tremble for the consequences. But I saw very clearly and swiftly a vista of very dark possibilities. Vinaceous Firefinches are not to be got every day; and I felt that the occasion was extraordinary; and not to be treated by ordinary methods. In fact, it was as far removed from the ordinary as a naptha lamp is remover from an Attar candle. I strongly recommend my method whenever rare and expensive birds are to be introduced into the house. The formula simply wants varying according as the birds are large or small.

After unpacking my new treasures, I put them into a nice box cage, and then I sat down and gazed at them; as contented as Virgil's old garden lover, of whom he says—"He equalled in his contented mind the wealth of kings." I was careful to put them in some snug little sleeping boxes, as Firefinches like to be cosy at night; and I was pleased when evening came, to find that they had gladly availed themselves of my kind providence, and each box was tenanted by two little Firefinches sitting side by side.

IS FIRST ATTACKED

The Best Sort of Aviary for Waxbills.

A great mistake which many aviculturists make is to put tiny Waxbills into a big garden aviary, where they are completely swallowed up in space. In fact, you can never see them, except when they come to the seed tray; and they may die and remain dead for months ere you know of your bereavement. What Waxbills want is a nice snug little aviary about 7ft. square. This is plenty big enough for half-a-dozen pairs, and they are always under observation.

If you have only a small aviary, don't try to ape your rich neighbour, who wires in half an acre. As well dress Venus like a Dolly Varden. Remember it is a small aviary, and don't block it up with forest trees, or, worse still, "botteries." There is no getting about among the latter, and I know hardly any bird that likes them, though some few will tolerate them. What little Finches like is a bushy box or privet. If there are boxes about, I will wager half the nests will be found built in them.

As I always try to practise what I preach, I put my Vinaceous Finches into a neat little aviary, all to themselves, and awaited results. Every morning I used to watch the occupants of that aviary daintily hopping about their little grass plot and picking off the insects too small for human eyes to see, and day by day I would watch them carrying the dried grass into the bushes and building little domed nests, which I could catch glimpses of, but dared not go near.

Shattered Hopes.

At last I began to miss the little hens, and then I felt sure that eggs had been laid, and that they were busy sitting. After about sixteen days I did what I am always telling my readers not to do—I went into that aviary and had a look round. What would I have given had I not done so when it was too late! Out popped all the little hens, and the little husbands set up an excited little chatter—or maybe it was scolding. I went out as quickly as I could, and presently Silence stole back, like a Chinese Empress into her disturbed dominions; but not so the little hens. They would not go near the nests; in fact there might not have been any nests to go near, judging by their conduct. Now, we all like to have someone to blame when things go wrong, but there's no one to throw the blame on when we've done it ourselves.

As all the harm was done, I boldly entered the aviary next day and examined these nests. Alas, there were three, and all with tiny white eggs in them. They were domed, with the hole towards the light, and they looked, as Mr. Folair used to say, "pernicious snug," but that was only an aggravation of my grief.

"A Nipping Frost."

A few weeks later my hopes began to raise their drooping heads, as I saw my Firefinches once more busy at nest building. Nature has no more interesting illusion than that of turning over a new leaf or beginning a new life. I was brim full of good resolutions—nothing would persuade me to enter that aviary. After a week I began to feel quite exhausted. There is nothing so tiring as a week spent in good resolutions. Still I held on, though I felt it was going to be a race between those Firefinches and Autumn. The leaves were beginning to turn and the nights to be chilly, but still I hoped there might yet be time, when one night there came a frost; as Hamlet calls it, a nipping frost, and when I went out in the morning every nest was deserted. I could not blame the birds; I could not have sat through such cold myself. Still, for one who has so many bitter disappointments, it was like a green pasture and waters of comfort that I had not lost my hens.

I ought to say that I kept my Firefinches constantly supplied with fresh ants' eggs all the time they were breeding, as I think that without these, and the little aphides they pick up themselves, success would be out of the question.

The Closure is Applied.

I consoled myself with the thought that next year I would achieve success. In fact, I said to myself there was no hurry. Did I not remember the letter a certain bishop wrote to one of his clergy who was very slack, commanding him to amend his ways? Here was the answer he got: "My Lord Bishop,—I have received and beg respectfully to acknowledge your letter. I believe that your Lordship can hardly be aware of the condition of our roads at this time of year. I am quite satisfied that if your Lordship saw them, you would think with me that it is impossible at present for our Great Enemy to reach this parish. As soon as the weather mends, and the roads give any signs of becoming passable, I assure your Lordship that I will take care to be beforehand with him." So, I thought in my pride, I would be, with any possible evils. But, like Randolph Churchill, who forgot Goschen; I forgot Death, and before another year came round Death had claimed all my little flock—there remained not one.

BY THE "BIRD FEVER"

When he meets his friends from the country his remarks about the "crops" cause them more than a little surprise.

We most of us get one chance in life; a few get more, but very few; and the wise man is he who seizes the first and most likely only chance. The weak wait for the second, either through indecision or the love of putting off. As for the fools, they let chances go without seizing them; they don't count; possibly they can't help being foolish; or they are vain, and think themselves so indispensable that the world is sure to want them later on, but it very seldom does. Apparently it didn't want me! Still it is nice to know that many a deed is recorded only in that Book, which holds the names of those—men or animals, souls or no souls—who Tried.

Chasing the Butterflies.

Nearly all birds appear to chase butterflies, but as this is frequently performed in a half-hearted fashion one is inclined to think that it is done as much by way of "sport" as anything. Perhaps of all birds the Swallows consume more butterflies and moths than any others. When they are feeding their young the wings of the insects can be seen lying underneath the nests, and are frequently present in quite considerable quantities.

Something Like a Useful Bird.

The following delightful story of a truly remarkable bird we discovered in the columns of a weekly newspaper.—"The Yakamik of South America is, so far as is known, the only 'shepherd bird' anywhere which will drive its charges to pasture, protect them from prowling animals, and gather them carefully together at nightfall to bring them safely home again. The native owners of sheep and poultry in Venezuela and British Guiana are the possessors of this species of Crane, for to that family the Yakamik belongs. They are entrusted with sheep, ducks, and poultry. The South American sees them depart for their feeding grounds, secure in the knowledge that the Crane will bring them all back safely. Any unlucky animal detected by the Yakamik while prowling about to steal gets very much the worst of it. The bird savagely attacks the marauder with wing and beak, forcing it to retreat in haste. A dog is no match at all for the Yakamik. At dusk the bird returns with its flock, never losing its way, no matter how far it may wander, for its sense of location is extremely acute. When it arrives home, the Yakamik roosts upon a tree or shed near its charges, to be ready to resume its supervision of them when they are out again in the morning. This queer bird is said to be as affectionate as it is trustworthy. It will follow its master about with capers of delight, showing its appreciation of any attention given it by the most extraordinary evolutions.

CANARY QUERIES.

Answered by CLAUDE ST. JOHN.

SAMPLES OF SEED (W.F.).—I find nothing whatever wrong with the seeds, both of which samples are of very good, all-round quality. I should not consider them very dear at the price named.

DEAD IN SHELL (H. Barnett).—A protracted chill, due to the hen staying off nest too long, might have been the cause of young dying in shell, but other causes might be responsible, such as weak germs, when the embryo fails to develop past a certain point from lack of vitality. I suspect in your case it was a chill in some way, and the birds may succeed all right with the next brood. Even if the eggs had been unfertile, as you first suspected, there would have been no reason whatever why they should not have been given another chance. Lots of pairs that have a full clutch of unfertile eggs the first round have full eggs in the second and third rounds.

NO PROGRESS (Mac.).—The most prominent impression conveyed by your letter is that you have been too impatient. It is not very unusual for a cock to cease singing when mated, and if he was really in good song before being put with the hen it does not necessarily follow that he is not in breeding condition. Mate him again with the most forward hen, and leave them together undisturbed for a month if necessary. Some birds will take this long to make a fair start, whilst others may settle down to business in a week or so. Do not keep moving them about. Exercise patience, and give the birds a fair chance. I presume you are certain of the sex of the cock. Read replies in last issue to "One lost in Sex," "Verb. Sap," and "An Anxious Novice."

NON FEEDERS (F. G. Elliott).—Occasionally young hens will lose the first brood apparently from sheer inexperience and perform their duties quite well towards future broods; and some highly-strung nervous birds appear to neglect the young from nervousness pure and simple. But the great majority of cases are due to so-called "sweating," for which see detailed reply to "R.F." in this issue. In the first-named case, besides treating them in dietetics the same as "sweaters," be as gentle and quiet as possible with them, and leave them severely alone. Beyond first taking a peep into nest when hen is off to see if young are all there and alive, do not interfere with them at all. You might also try removing the cock for the following brood if this was not done with the brood in question.

TO PREVENT HEN "SWEATING." (R.F.).—I'm afraid the problem is as yet unsolved. The only real preventive is to have the birds in a thoroughly healthy and normal condition, so that events follow in sequence. The time for this is during the winter and spring months, rather than after the birds are paired. The best you can do to overcome trouble when it arises is to pay strict attention to cleanliness and purity of all soft food; to vary it as far as possible in order to make it palatable and enticing to suit the whims of the particular hen; to give small quantities several times a day, rather than a large amount at rare intervals; to give a variety of green food in small quantities, fresh and often. If you are using the orthodox plain egg food, add a little maw seed to it, and if young show signs of looseness, a little crushed arrowroot biscuit would be useful. Add also a little bread sopped in cold milk, and crushed hemp (see that it is quite sound), and a little soaked or scalded rape. For green food, give lettuce, groundsel, chickweed, chicory, or watercress, but no dandelion. As soon as you see signs of flagging—or even before if the hen is a known "sweater"—give a bath in which a little common salt has been dissolved, and dissolve a crystal of sulphate of soda the size of a small pea in the drinking water, for one-half of each day until the crisis is well passed. Removing cock and leaving hen to hatch and rear young aloue is often useful.

NOT FEEDING YOUNG (Walter Ashtou).—Read replies to "F. G. Elliott" and "R.F." in this issue, which apply to your case. If you did uot remove the cocks whilst hens were sitting last season, try that method this year. When you put the hens to sit, take away the cock and cage him alone out of sight of the hen. If out of ear-shot so much the better. If the heus do not appear to commence feeding, you might also give a little green food—lettuce or chickweed—from the beginning. As a novice you would find the handbook, "Canary Breeding for Beginners," of great assistunce, and also the article on surmounting dimculties in "Cage Birds Annual" for current year.

A SLOW PAIR (E. Burgess).—You can do nothing in a case of this kind, but cultivate patience and hope that things will turn out right. This pair of birds was probahly not quite so keen as the others, but still they have not been together long enough yet to give any cause for anxiety. They may begin to work in earnest any day. Leave them together, and give three or four dandelion leaves daily, a small quantity of egg-food sprinkled with equal parts maw, gold of pleasure, and sesame every second day, and on the alternate days a little mixture of equal parts hemp, inga, unlet, and teazle.

BLIND YORKSHIRE, ETC. (Windmill).—You can do nothing whatever to cure the Yorkshire, which is blind from cataract. It will live comfortably and happily enough if caged alone, and will doubtless sing after a time, and become very tame, but do not attempt to breed with it. To do so is simply perpetuating the tendeney to this distressing complaint—a thing which is wholly indefensible. To attain success in breeding you should get one of our handbooks, "Canary Breeding for Beginners," or House's "Manual," or "Our Canaries," and carefully follow instructions therein. Have you the current year's CAGE BIRDS ANNUAL? If not, the article on overcoming difficulties would prove of great benefit to you. You do not say in what particular way you failed last season, so I cannot give you more definite advice than this.

HEN NOT LAYING (Devonian).—This is the type of hen written of hy Dr. Bower in Part VII. of "Our Canaries," under the term "Squatting Hens." The chapter would doubtless interest you, and explain much that now seems puzzling to you. The cause is arrested, or non-development of the sexual organs, and the chances of success with these subjects are, I fear, very remote. Take the nest pan and all material away, but leave the birds together, and go on feeding somewhat generously as when preparing for breeding, adding two or three finely chopped mealworms to the egg-food each time, and give six drops of tincture of gentian and three of tincture of steel in the water four time a week. If you see the hen, after a fortnight or so of this treatment, gripping a beakful of her breast feathers, and going about as if trying to find a place to deposit them, return the nest-pan and a little material and let her start afresh. If she again takes to sitting on nest without laying give her a clutch of fertile eggs of another hen to hatch and rear Please let me hear result of this treatment.

REFUSING NEST, AND RINGS (W.E.H.).—(1) Have you tried varying position and style of nest-pan, or the sort of nesting material? Possibly the hen objects to one or other of these, and there is nothing for it but to humour her. You might have tried placing nest on the floor, when she might have taken to it, and after she had got quite broody with sitting you might have lifted it at least just clear of the sand tray without disturbing her. If neither of these methods succeeds with the next clutch of eggs, there in nothing left but to transfer the eggs when laid to another hen, or hens, to be hatched and reared. (2) As regards marking birds, there are the open rings you could fall back upon with which you should find neither difficulty nor risk in marking the young birds. Another useful method of marking is to cut small notches in the inner web of the flights when separating the young. There is some risk in this of the bird dropping or breaking off the marked feathers, but if you duplicate the mark on at least two feathers, one in each wing, the risk is very small, and you still have scope enough to mark a great many birds.

A PITIABLE SIGHT (T. Sutton).—Did not you read article on red mites in our columns on April 6th and 13th? If not, get these issues and look it up, as it is impossible to give full details in these replies. It is quite possible for this pest to cause such effects as you describe, but it is the cage and its surroundings, rather than the bird, that must be attended to. Give bird a bath daily in which a little essence of quassia or sulphuretted potash—quantity given in article referred to—has been mixed, and also transfer it to a temporary cage whilst the other is being thoroughly overhauled and renovated. Feed bird fairly generously, and give a good spray of chickweed daily Give a morsel of bread and milk slightly dusted with flowers of sulphur and sprinkled with maw seed every second day for a fortnight, and on the alternate days add six drops of lemon juice and as much chlorate of potash as will cover a threepenny piece to the drinking water. You might slightly anoint the bare places with Lanocyllin twice a week for a month.

YORKSHIRE MAKES NOISE (League Member).—It is probably a little overfed. Treat as follows for a fortnight and limit food supply to quantities named. Give a teaspoonful of plain canary only one day; next day give only half this quantity, and add the same amount of a mixture of equal parts summer and black rape and inga; and the third day give half a teaspoonful of canary and the same quantity of crushed sponge cake with three drops of sherry and two of cod liver oil emulsion mixed in it. Repeat in same order again and again for a fortnight. Give a liberal supply of fresh green food daily, chickweed, groundsel, dandelion, lettuce, or watercress, but no other food of any kind and no fruit. Give six drops of syrup of rhubarb and a crystal of sulphate of soda the size of a small pea in the water every second day for a week, and in next week 20 drops of whisky, 10 of glycerine, and two of eucalyptus oil, well shaken together every second day.

ROLLER OUT OF SONG (Rita).—The bird has probably got a little run down in condition, as they are sometimes apt to do, and to take a rest after several month's hard singing. See that it is in a bright and comfortable position, fairly equable, and quite free from draughts. Also see that cage is free from red mites. Give a staple seed diet of two parts canary to one part summer rape. Every second day for a fortnight give half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake, with four drops of sherry and two of cod liver oil emulsion, well mixed in it, and sprinkled with equal parts maw and gold of pleasure seed, on the alternate days give a similar quantity of a mixture of equal parts hemp, inga, millet and teazle. Give a leaf of dandelion daily. In the drinking water give ten drops of syrup of buckthorn for two days, and afterwards six of tincture of gentian, and three of tincture of steel every second day for a week. You can get small whistles or bird warblers of almost any of the large Canary dealers advertising in our columns. Watch their adverts, or send for catalogue.

GONE OFF SONG (Novice).—It is not very uncommon for a cock to cease singing when mated, and a fortnight after mating is too early to give way to despair. Leave the birds alone, and I think very probably you will find things come all right in the end. The cock will probably get more responsive when the most important time arrives. Give two leaves of crisp young dandelion daily, and for the rest, exercise patience. See reply to "Mac."

AN UNNATURAL FATHER (A.R.H.).—You did quite right to remove the cock when you found the mutilated young. That he was the culprit is sufficiently proved by no more such tragedies occurring since his removal. It will not be quite safe to return him, even now the young are rather older. Let the hen rear them by herself, and do not return the cock until the young are ready to take away from the hen, unless compelled to do so by the hen starting nesting again. In the latter case place the young in a nursery cage when the cock is returned. Remove cock in the next round when the hen is put to sit. By no means give him another chance of helping to rear young.

LAYING ON FLOOR (No Nom-de-plume).—You will find a detailed reply to another querist on this subject this week. When all other means failed you should have placed the nest pans on the floor, when the hens might have taken to them there. As both your hens have acted similarly, I wonder if your cages or the position in which they are kept are at fault. Remember, hens like a certain amount of privacy for nesting, and if yours are lovingly exposed to disturbing influences, you should alter these conditions, so as to give the hens the choice of some seclusion.

SWEATING AGAIN (C.F.H.).—See replies to "F. G. Elliott," and "R.F." on this subject. If you had given me details of your feeding for the first three days I might have discovered if there was any contributing cause in this. Give the egg-food freshly prepared three times daily, and sprinkle it with a little maw seed, and give only small quantities each time. Also give a small crisp young lettuce leaf or spray of chickweed twice each day after the first day of hatching, and after the third day a teaspoonful of soaked rape seed, but see that this does not remain to become sour. By the way, "an underground room" does not sound a very suitable place for breeding. Is it well lit and ventilated. If not, this may he the real cause of your trouble. You should get "Canary Breeding for Beginners," which our manager would send you post free for 7d., which would help you over many of these initial difficulties.

PREVENTING FERTILITY (J.A.P.).—(1) Though it might be quite possible by a somewhat delicate operation, as caponising, to render a cock bird impotent, I do not think there is the least likelihood of such a thing ever being performed, and the idea of "pinching" is, in my opinion, too far-fetched to be worth credence. There are so many causes of infertility, and clutches of unfertile eggs are of such common occurrence in the early part of the season, that it is infinitely more likely some natural cause was operating to produce the unfertile eggs in the cases mentioned. There is really no reason why the same birds should not have clutches of fertile eggs next time. It frequently happens so. (2) See Mr. Weston's replies re Linnet query. If already mated you must be guided by the bird's demeanour, which is apt to alter when breeding is in progress. Many Linnets, however, are quite trustworthy.

PECULIAR ATTACKS. (Doe).—Judging from the meagre details you give, I can only imagine that the bird either injures itself internally in some way during the periods of excitability, or that the excessive excitement induces partial and temporary paralysis of certain nervous centres. There is probably nothing you can do in the way of cure when the attacks come on. When it recovers from an attack treat as advised to "Rita," for two or three weeks, then revert to a plainer dietary, and when a period of excitement comes on again, feed pluinly, give a liberal supply of green food, and dissolve a crystal of sulphate of soda as large as a small pea, and a crystal of bromide of potassium in the drinking water every second dny for a week, or a little longer if necessary to remove the excitability. It is advisable not to keep it among other birds, the presence and song of which would tend to increase the liability to this form of excitement.

Answered by G. E. WESTON.

A WEED (One and All).—It is shepherd's purse and a splendid sample. I only wish I had a box of it!

EYE TROUBLE (G. B.).—Yes; I should at once try the remedy you mention. These eye troubles, however, often prove obstinate things, unfortunately.

ABOUT A GOLDFINCH (J. Wood).—Send to our publisher for "Nutshell" booklet No. 1, post free, 2½d., which will tell you all about sexing Goldfinches and the best way to cage and feed them. You will find it a very useful book to have by you.

IN AN "AVIARY" (Handy, Smethwick).—Your outdoor place, 3ft. high and long by 18 inches wide is not an "aviary," but merely a large cage, and you would stand no earthly chance of breeding with several different pairs of British birds placed therein. You might try one pair, if you feel so disposed; it will be useless to try more. How are you going to protect the place from the attacks of cats? If they can get at it, they will prove very troublesome owing to the width being so little. I am sorry to have to pen so discouraging an answer, but you would seem to have got hold of a wrong idea, as apparently you think it easy to breed British birds by turning a number of pairs into a very confined space. As a matter of fact, it is the exact opposite—practically an impossibility, in fact.

TWO LINNETS (H. Tomlinson). The immoderate drinking is the cause. Get half-an-ounce of crystals of citrate of iron and quinine from a good chemist and dissolve daily in two tablespoonfuls of drinking water as much as will, when crossed, just lie on a threepenny bit. Give this for 7 or 8 days, when the trouble should be at an end. Let the birds have a fair amount of teazle seed in their daily mixture, and a little maw seed daily for a time will do good.

IN A CAGE (W. G. G.).—Canary hens do not mind nesting in all-wire cages if they have always been used to such, and it is not really necessary to cover any part of them. It is a good plan, however, to shelter the nesting end with pieces of wadboard (or other suitable material) at side, and at top. This should be put up before the hen builds however.

MULE BREEDING (Greenfinch).—I should say that the Canary you mention is a hen for sure, otherwise there would almost certainly be battles between it and the cock Greenfinch, assuming the latter to be in first-rate condition. Have you examined its vent? A sure sexual sign at this time of the year. It is of no use to pair birds until both are ready. Young (previous season) hens are usually somewhat late the first year in starting a nest. I should think, however, that she is just coming into form, judging by your letter. She'll breed all right in due course, never fear.

WHAT IS "CRISSEL" (A. Gamble).—"Crissel" is the name given to a preparation of dried meat. It is sold ground into grades of varying coarseness, and the finest grade (like meal) is that best suited for birds, though big birds, such as Magpies, can be given the coarser "Crissel." I should have thought that every sizeable corn and seed stores would have known "Crissel." Ask for meat meal, anyway.

LARK FOOD (J.W.H.).—Use equal parts ground puppy cakes and the food (No. 2) mentioned. The plain truth is the food is too cheap; you can't expect to get a good insectivorous mixture at anything like this price. You will have to pay 1s. to 1s. 6d. per pound for anything like a good-class food. It is against the rules to recommend any particular advertised foods in these columns. It would be unfair to do so; there are many good insectile mixtures on the market. The best food for regular use with Larks would be "half and half" of crushed puppy cakes and some high-grade mixture for insectivorous birds. Sample No. 1 is right enough if given now and again.

A LINNET AILING (M.C.).—First of all give for two days saline medicine, as advised "M.U.M." this week; follow this with a course of the iron and quinine crystals, as advised H. Tomlinson, continued for at least a week. Your method of feeding is surely very crude and unusual? Give the following as a stock mixture: Canary 3 parts, teazle 2 parts, summer rape 1 part and linseed half part, by measure. Let the bird have some suitable green food; it is plentiful now in the lanes and fields. Have you read the "Nutshell" booklet dealing with the Linnet? I should think it would be helpful to you.

AVIARY MATTERS (Pom).—(1) The Blackbird would be unsteady at first, no douht, and upset the other birds hy dashing about, but he would probably settle down in a short time and enjoy his new home. (2) This query seems to have gone to another department; it is not amongst my own batch .(3) Stick to the British seed-eaters—the Finches and Buntings—though one or two Foreign seed-eaters would lend pleasing variety. Our Mr. W. T. Page would name a few for you. The chances of breeding are very slender. Mixed collections of birds in confined quarters are not very prodigal in the matter of young. By-the-way, I consider that your avinry would have been very much improved if more of the roof had been boarded over. (4) Elder bushes are good. You can also use one or other of these: Box, privet, holly, laurel, euonymus, or thorn bushes.

RELEASING TWO LINNETS (Linnet Lover).—Any time from now onwards would do. I presume that the birds can fly well, i.e., have their wing feathers intact. See that their claws are not over-grown; cut them to a normal length, if necessary. Linnets are birds of the commons and open spaces rather than of enclosed gardens and parks hence I should prefer Regent's Park or Hampstead Heath to the spot you mention, though it is by no means a bad one.

NOT SINGING (Bad Bird).—You puzzle me; it is hard to say why a two-year-old Thruen, formerly a fine songster, should not now be singing, although in "lovely plumage and perfect health." Have you lately introduced any rival songster into his company? Try him for a time with a liberal supply of live-food daily—you could get snails, black-beetles, gentles, small earthworms, slugs, etc.

DEATH OF A GOLDFINCH AND CANARY (A. B. C.).—Without a post-mortem examination—which our Mr. Yates would have made for you—it is quite impossible to tell of what disease your two birds died. It certainly looks as though it were something of a contagious nature, and I think your purchase of the second-hand cage was very ill-advised, seeing that you say it was in a "filthy condition." Washing with carbolic soap would be useless to rid it of disease germs, if any were lurking about it, and, personally, I shall be surprised if it is not the cause of your losses. The symptoms described are those of the dreaded "bird fever."

THE CASE OF A BULLIE (M. U. M.).—Give your Bullfinch two or three mild doses of saline medicine—say as much sulphate of soda (crushed) as will just cover a sixpence, dissolved in two tablespoonfuls of drinking water, on alternate days. Add teazle seed to his diet. Give greenfood much more freely (daily) and vary it, flowering groundsel and dandelion, buds from fruit bushes and trees, hawthorn hedges, etc., shepherd's purse, in addition to the chickweed. The Bullfinch feeds very largely on buds, berries, weed-seeds, and the like, in a state of Nature. Your Goldie is evidently not a bird of very "kind" disposition, and he will not get steady, I am afraid, until he has moulted in captivity.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by Wesley T. Page, F.Z.S., Etc.

Which is the Culprit? (K.W.).—It is a fair puzzle, and one which I fear you can only solve by closest observation. The most likely culprits among the foreigners are the Green Singing Finches, with just a slight reserve on the Cuttlethroats and the Java Sparrows, though these last two would be more inclined to bully the Canaries and throw out the eggs than eat them. Quite as likely as not, the Canaries are the culprits, and possibly the Bullfinch. I regret I cannot be more definite, but I've kept all the birds you name together without mishap. I have had Green Singing Finches which ate their own eggs, but even they did not interfere with other nests, and I am strongly of the opinion that the Canaries are the culprits.

Birds for Cage (G.Y.).—Here are several alternatives: (1) Two pairs Budgerigars and one pair Cockatiels; (2) one pair each Budgerigars, Cockatiels, and Blue-wing Lovebirds; (3) one pair each Budgerigars, Blue-wing, and Lavender-headed (Madagascar) Lovebirds. For the Lovebirds supply closed boxes, with an oval hole, 1½ by 1in., cut in one side near the top. Also, as soon as they show signs of nesting, put in a living branch of poplar, birch, or some kind of fruit tree; they will strip off the bark and leaves, and line their nest-box with it.

Java Sparrows (Pom.).—Java sparrows are inclined to be aggressive when in confined quarters, and, as with all species, there are pugnacious pairs which will bully anything that will submit. I am surprised that Greenfinches should submit, and I expect they will yet turn and give the Javas a thrashing; in fact, "put them in their place." How about nesting accommodation? Put in a husk, a square enclosed box about 6in. square, with an oval hole cut in one side near the top for entrance, also a chip (Hartz traveling cage). The Javas will probably occupy themselves with these and leave the Greenfinches unmolested.

Budgerigars Moulting, etc. (A.B.M.).—(1) Your birds are evidently out of condition, but I could have given you a better opinion if you had informed me how and where you were keeping them. Our Nutshell "Budgerigars," 2½d. post free, from our Manager, would give you the A to Z of keeping this species. Give them seeding (flowering) grass and sunflower seed, (3) hemp, rape, canaries, dandelion, thistle, dandelion, and good of pleasure seeds. Also supply green food, such as seeding (flowering) grass, chickweed, groundsel, lettuce, sprays of fruit, hawthorn, and the like, with buds on, cuttlebone, grit, ants' eggs, and a little soft food when they are feeding young. Get a mate for the Cuttlethroat, and they should breed. For the British Finches a piece of "wind seed mixture," as sold, makes an agreeable change; and the half ripe seeds of most of our hedgerows weeds and grasses are all eaten with benefit and relish.

A Changed Diet (S. Reed).—The diet should never be abruptly changed, though that which you are now giving is the more wholesome, and it is accustomed to it now. Get some quassia solution and spray it with a minute solution twice weekly, keeping the bird out of draught till dry. Give Dinneford's magnesia every fourth day—one teaspoonful in two tablespoonfuls of water is sufficient for one day's supply—so long as the bowels are not watery loose; when this occurs cease giving the laxative regularly, but give it sufficiently often to keep the bowels moving freely; on other days put half a teaspoonful of hypophosphates in the daily supply of drinking water. Examine bird's cage, and if there are any signs of parasites, well swill every crevice, perches, and food hoppers with boiling water—repeat the operation if necessary. Report progress in a fortnight. Get our Nutshell, "The Grey Parrot," 2½d. post free, from our Manager, it will help you. Keep it out of draught, but where it can get light and fresh air.

An Ailing Amazon (H. H.).—I fear I cannot help you as I might have done had you told me how you were feeding and treating the bird. I can only assume that you are right, and it is suffering from a chill. On receipt of this reply give three drops of Dinneford's Magnesia direct to the beak, and repeat the dose after an interval of three days. In the drinking water for say three or four days, put 15 drops ammoniated tincture of quinine, use two tablespoonfuls as the day's supply; you must not use a metal drinker when giving drugs. If there is any running at the nostrils, spray or bathe with diluted glyco-thymoline. Keep the bird warm, out of draught, yet not out of reach of fresh air. Do not give tea, coffee, or milk sops, table scraps, or any kind of animal food whatever. Report progress a week hence, with full details as to how it has been fed in the past, and present symptoms.

Egg-binding (P. O.).—In some instances this formidable trouble among female cage birds (not so troublesome in the aviary) is of very obscure origin, and only a post mortem examination would declare it. In others, a sudden fall in the temperature will account for it. Shell-less eggs are very difficult for the bird to get rid of, and in your case I cannot understand it, as you had made every provision to meet the need. Some seasons there is quite an epidemic of egg-binding, and in others (no more favourable) only isolated cases. I should assume that the birds were not quite fit; had the egg been shelled the precautions you took would undoubtedly have given relief. In addition to your previous treatment, I can only suggest that you gently pass a feather, charged either with castor oil, or the liquid extract of ergot, up the rectum (vent), and carefully twist it round. I cannot account for the shell-less egg, save unfitness of the bird, in your case. I can only suggest as to your dietary, as much green food as they will eat—lettuce, chickweed, seeding (flowering) grass, etc. Give byno-phosphates every other day in the drinking water for a month.

Cockatoo Biting its Feet (F. H. M.).—Our previous remedies were rather severe. There is nothing for you to do but to continue them. The use of the magnesia should have a cooling effect on the bird's system generally. Bathe the feet daily to keep them clean. You must apply the Friar's Balsam to check bleeding. If it is simply a vice (not improbable) it will be difficult to check. I certainly advise you to call in a vet. to examine the feet, and to prescribe from a personal diagnosis. If it is simply a vice, you had better get him or some local fancier to fix a light zinc collar round its neck (in shape like a large washer) sufficiently low down to enable to get at the food, yet projecting out sufficiently far to prevent it getting at its feet. As it will also be unable to preen its feathers, you must spray him (use a mist sprayer) with chilled water every other day, and keep him out of draught till dry. As soon as the weather permits I should have him out of doors a good deal, not where the sun will continuously be shining upon, or the wind blow in a current through his cage. Give it as much green food and fruit as it will take; if it will not take one kind try another, till you strike its fancy.

Skylark Killed by a Golf Ball.

Sir,—A gentleman living here at Sutton, Surrey, while playing golf on the links of the Banstead Golf Club last week had the misfortune to kill a Lark. After he had driven the ball a Lark rose up from the ground and the ball struck the bird while flying in the air. The gentleman is having the bird stuffed and mounted in a glass case.

Coventry O.S. and the Suspension of Mr. G. Lawrance.

Sir,—The Committee of the above Society, of which Mr. G. Lawrance is a member, have heard his explanation, and after thoroughly investigating the matter, have decided that Mr. Lawrance's action in showing his bird after the accident to it in transit from a show, was from want of due consideration, and not an attempt to deceive.

How Are Linnet Singing Contests Conducted?

Sir,—I would like to ask a question through the correspondence columns of Cage Birds about Linnet contest singing. The questions I have asked of more experienced fanciers are: Are Linnets at a time-singing contest put face to face on a table, window ledge, wall, or where? What distance apart are they usually placed? In quality singing are two birds hung up at once, and is one hung up above the other; if so do they draw for top place?

The Judging of Quality Linnet Song.

Sir,—It gives me the greatest pleasure to acknowledge the two letters in your last week's Cage Birds. I quite appreciate Mr. Sisson's point that we should go for length, turns and form, and that judges should give and take, according to song. I can also quite understand that some of our judges can explain how a bird has sung to win. But that is not what is required. We contend that every bird that is entered in a contest should have marked to its number what it has done, so that when a novice enters his bird he could see what it had done. I contend this would give him some encouragement to go further. Mr. F. Allen says the Linnet's song would be better without points. That I have argued with one of our prominent judges, who is of the same opinion. I am bound to admit that it is best, but at the same time, if there are no points, there should be a system different to the one we have had at our contests in Lancashire, as there is nothing on the sheet but 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5. I want to know if that is a proper way to give the result of the contest.

The Making of Holly Bark Bird Lime

And Lime from Linseed Oil.

Sir,—I fear that if "A.H." wants the genuine article he will have to make it, as though I have seen quite a few samples which purported to be such, I have never yet seen any which in the least resemble the genuine holly either in tenacity or weather resisting qualities. I have made bird-lime by various methods, some of which were primitive, by reason of a sudden call for their use, a handful of wheat, a few shreds of bark, and a good set of teeth constituting the entire material and apparatus. And on more than one occasion while fishing in the vicinity of a fir wood I have improvised a very effective "touch down" by using the resin which exudes from those trees. I will however describe the process of making holly bark, and another, and I venture to say that after "A.H." has made the former, he will cease to wonder at its "unpurchasability." Take the bark from holly trees in the months of April, May, or June, as the sap is then ascending, or up, and a larger proportion of glutinous matter is obtained than during the winter months. A large quantity of bark is necessary, as the lime obtained is only equal to about 4 per cent. of the raw material. Placing the bark in an old pot, with a sufficiency of water, let it boil till the outer or green skin separates from the inner pith. It is from the latter that the lime is obtained, the green skin being thrown away. Placing the bark in an old bass, or bag, previously damped, bury same in a warm and moist situation to decompose—a garden hot-bed, dung heap, or the marshy bank of a pond or river being very suitable. The time necessary for this decomposing process depends on the amount of heat and moisture. When the mass is sufficiently rotten to permit of its being easily pulped, it is ready for the final part of the process, which is better carried out on the side of a brook, running water being a necessary factor. Laying a portion of the bark on a large stone proceed to pound it into pulp, using another stone, or preferably a broad faced hammer, for that purpose. On the thoroughness of this process depends greatly the amount of lime procured, as if imperfectly done a large proportion of the lime is lost in the final stage, viz., the washing. This is done by taking a handful of the pulp and kneading it, holding same in running water meantime, when all the fibre floats away and leaves the lime sticking on the hands, from which it may be transferred to jars for use as required. Another method: Take a quantity of pure linseed oil, and placing same in a pot sufficiently large to ensure safety from boiling over and the resultant conflagrations, boil it slowly on a clear fire, stirring the while. Try it occasionally by dropping a little from the stick into cold water, and taking the blob between finger and thumb, when the progress may be estimated by the distance these may be extended without breaking the threads. When a distinct resistance is felt, and the threads remain unruptured though finger and thumb are fully extended the mass may be considered sufficiently cooked; and as a guide to quantity I may state that it will then have shrunk to about half the bulk of the oil used. Many just store it for use at this stage, but I find it is much improved by just allowing it to become slightly cooled, and pouring it into a basin of cold water, then taking it in the hands and kneading it, stretching and manipulating it in the manner of candy. That its tenacity is much improved thereby there can be no doubt; it may then be stored away in air tight tins and will remain unchanged for any length of time. Some advise the addition of a proportion of Stockholm tar to the above, but experiments in that direction convince me that the only advantage of such is an increase in bulk, and the addition does not improve the quality, unless the lime has been overcooked, when a modicum of tar may be used to thin the mass. I thus advise a curtailment of the boiling, and the addition of resin. This I find renders it very liable to run in warm weather, and become firm and useless in a hard frost. But such would be very useful for flypapers. J. Steel.

The Suggested New Classification of British Birds.

Sir,—I think I shall be voicing the feelings of many of your readers in joining Mr. Steel in his hope that the Scottish B.B. and M.C. will give its attention to the above matter. The National B.B. and M.C. has made a praiseworthy attempt to grapple with the question, but it is scarcely to be expected that any such attempt would be so perfect as not to require or admit of any modification. Certain modifications in any cut and dried scheme would be necessary to meet local conditions which differ of course in different localities, and even in different societies, and most of these may quite well be left in the hands of the individual societies concerned. For example, it is quite easy to group different species of birds together, to delete or add classes, and make any slight alterations which may be called for by local circumstances. The great thing is to avoid ambiguous words, and thereby to avoid misunderstandings and wrong tactics, and the suggested classification is a noteworthy step in this direction. I think there is not much in Mr. Steel's objection that in a classification of nine classes a lot of different species would be competing together, for it would be quite impossible to avoid this in any arrangement of nine classes. I think if Mr. Steel would trouble to make a list of birds which could meet together under any of the old class headings he would find quite as much of a mixture. With regard to the suggestion that the Golden Oriole and the Hoopoe should compete in the class for Continental birds, this is met by the fact that the Committee of the N.B.B. and M.C. long ago decided that the recorded appearances of these birds in England were of sufficient frequency to justify the birds being included in their list of British birds, and as the full classification mentions individually every species in that list, the names of these birds necessarily occur in the classification. In case there are any who are, as suggested by Mr. Steel, wondering what particular five Buntings are eligible for competition in Class 12., perhaps you will allow me to suggest that the five British Buntings, besides the Yellow Hammer, on the N.B.B. and M.C. list are the Corn, Reed, Cirl, Snow and Lapland. Neither the Meadow, Black-headed, Ortolan, nor any other of the Continental Buntings we sometimes see "masquerading" on the show-bench is on the Club's list. Exhibitor.

SPRINGTIME—AND AUTUMN.

A Seasonable Dream of the good things the Autumntide may hold in store!

The Meaning of "Noggin."

Sir,—I have a recipe for use in cases of backward moult, which says, "Put sixpennyworth of Saffron in a Noggin of Rum." I should be pleased if someone would enlighten me as to the exact amount, as I have failed to find the capacity of a "Noggin."

The Story of My Pet Budgerigar.

Told in Birdie Language

Sir,—My Budgie is an interesting bird, possessing many peculiar habits which are quite unnatural to his own particular species. He has his likes and dislikes, the same as mortal man. Unlike the rest of the Budgerigars, he will eat no green-food, and even ripe fruit will not tempt him. I have tried him with many dainty tit-bits, but the seed trough receives his best attention. Seeding grasses he has no desire for, and I usually find them exactly as I placed them in his cage. He is particularly impartial to strangers, and has taken a great dislike to hats and bonnets. Should a stranger enter, Budgie eyes him all over, and if an advance is made towards the cage, down to the bottom Budgie goes, to find, if possible, a suitable hiding place. Budgie is not an English bred bird, but an imported one, and makes himself quite at home with us now. He has a great amount of prattle, with an occasional "Pretty Polly," and lots of other birdie language to the passing trains, or to the noise of the mangle. He loves to have his exercise, as we call it, and to roam about at will. Oftimes we place his cage on the table or floor, and allow him an hour's freedom, which he much enjoys. Could my Budgie but tell his own life's story it would run somewhat as follows: Some three years ago I was captured and taken prisoner with many others of my species, and packed ready to be despatched for England's shores. Our over-sea voyage was fairly good, with, of course a certain amount of rocking. We had a liberal supply of food, but some of my comrades did not take very readily to it, although I did justice to it. By-and-by we reached England and here we were dis-embarked and sent along to our purchaser, who in due time took us out of our travelling cages, and finally we were put into a very large sort of cage wherein we could shake out our feathers, and breathe a little more freely and also see a little more daylight. Many were the visitors who came to have a peep at us through the wires and pass all sorts of remarks about us. One day there was such a ringing noise (which I found out later must have been the telephone) and presently a cage was placed outside ours. Several Budgies were fetched out and placed in this cage, and I began to wonder who's turn it was next. Then a large hand made a grab for me. Although I dodged it several times I was finally captured, but not until I had given it several sharp pecks. We were then packed up and sent by train to some bird dealer's shop many miles away. Here I stayed for sometime. However, one day a young man and a little boy came into the shop and asked the price of me and another of my species. The purchase made, amidst the jink of coin, I was once more packed in a little cage along with my new acquaintance, and taken I knew not where, for a piece of paper was well wrapped round, with a hole or two cut in the top as a sort of ventilation. We were travelling for about an hour and a half before we reached our final destination. It was now almost dark, but with the aid of a lighted lamp we were able to find our way into a large and roomy cage with plenty of sand and grit in the bottom and a good supply of seed, etc. Here I was christened "Polly," and my chum "Joey." Really I was "Joey" also, and although we were both "Joey's" we managed to agree very well, and spent some happy months together. One day, however, my chum was taken very ill. He had several fits during the day, and grew worse as night came on. He struggled hard to pull through. My master placed him in another cage where my old chum bade his final farewell. I am now caged by myself, and still get a certain amount of freedom. My name is still "Polly." I do the best I can for my master, who treats me well. Here I live and move and have my being. Here I hope to live and remain till death do us part, feeling assured my master will never sell me, for (let me whisper it to you) I heard him say so.

As Seen by a Bird-keeper.

Sir,—I have been a bird lover from a child and am never without a bird, and I would like to inform "faddists" that a true bird-keeper and lover is one of the first to try to stop any cruelty that he sees to birds anywhere. I may say that most of our British birds, when they drop into the hands of a true fancier, soon become more affectionate than even Canaries that are bred in cages. Sometimes it is possible to get a British bird that won't settle down and I say to others when it happens, give them their liberty, as I do myself. Now, sir, my house joins up to an enclosure, and what is carried on in there sometimes I should call barbarous cruelty. You'll see two or three large hampers packed with live rabbits. They are let out for dogs to run after and pulled all to pieces almost. Then we see pigeons let out of traps one by one for men to shoot at, and many a pigeon goes off with one or perhaps both legs smashed. I say let the R.S.P.C.A. turn their attention to where real cruelty goes on.

Consistent.

Skylarks Reared in Cages by their Mothers.

Sir,—It may be of some little interest to Lark fanciers to know that my son and I found two Larks' nests last year, and we caught the old birds belonging to both nests, and put them in a Lark cage while we got home, when we put each old hen in a cage by herself—a cage for each nest, put so that each hen could not see the other. The old hens fed the young and brought them up. We covered the cages with a linen cloth, so that they would not be disturbed. We gave them to feed on boiled milk and bread soaked in it; the third day a chopped-up boiled egg with the bread; and six mealworms a day for each nest. We had no trouble at all. We let the old birds free when the young could pick up food for themselves.

The Wiring of Cages.

Sir,—I recollect seeing the block that "Working Man" refers to, described (with drawings) in these columns. No doubt some of your readers could inform him as to the date, or supply him with the copies. Re looping, he requires a pair of round-nosed pliers, and the end of the wire is turned somewhat in the form of the mark of interrogation which terminates his query. I hope later to describe the block method of making Border show cages, and how to obviate the using of loops. If "W. M." cares to forward his address, I will send him particulars meantime. Apropos of cage-making, I recently became possessed of a most ingenious machine for boring holes, and am often asked where a similar one could be procured. When I first saw mine it was being worked by the late Mr. Pollock of Newton Grange, that was over twenty years ago. The machine has evidently been constructed by an engineer, and would cost about £1. It is worked on the vertical principle, and by an arrangement of screws takes any thickness, height or length of wood, bores any required gauge or mesh, automatically ensuring absolute accuracy and perpendicularity; works by depressing a handle, and bores at the rate of about sixty holes a minute. If any engineering reader is desirous of copying mine, I will be pleased to let him have it for a month, if carriage paid both ways—weight, exclusive of packing, 7lbs., a reference to club secretary or other respectable party being the only condition.

The Yorkshire Union and Its Method of Balloting.

An Apology.

Sir,—With reference to the letter signed by Mr. M. Skirrow, Secretary of the Bolton Woods C.B.S., published in your issue of March 16, 1912, calling in question the accuracy of the number of votes recorded at the annual ballot of the Yorkshire Union for the present year, and also that of two years ago, we wish to say that we are now satisfied that the reflections cast upon the officials concerned were based upon misleading and inaccurate statements, absolutely devoid of any foundation whatever, and we desire to publicly and unreservedly withdraw and apologise for having caused to be published any imputation adversely affecting the integrity of the said officials.

Hen Blackbird Preferred the "Torture of Captivity."

Sir,—A hen Blackbird was found in a friend's garden about ten days ago, and knowing that I was "daft on birds" he brought it to me. She had been sadly knocked about, so I gladly gave her house-room for a week, until she looked strong enough to take care of herself. Then after a parting meal of maggots I let her out into our back garden, but, to my surprise she was very reluctant to go. The morning after, I was awakened by a strange hammering sound. I lay and puzzled over what it could be, and at last rose to settle the question. It was the Blackie back again, sitting on the window sill, hammering loudly and repeatedly with her big beak on the glass, waiting to get in! This occurred several days in succession, until it seemed to dawn on her that though there was always food at the window (for any bird that came) there was "no admittance." It was pleasing to see the bird back again, and surely our humanitarian friends will admit that this was one instance where a wild bird actually preferred "the torture of captivity."

A Well-known Yorkshire Fancier's Experiences of Hybrid Breeding.

Sir,—I will give my fellow-readers a little of my experience, especialy for the benefit of novices in the hobby of Hybrid breeding. Most breeders say that it is of no use trying for hybrids in ordinary breeding cages. Well, for the last ten years I have been trying for hybrids of various kinds in ordinary double breeding cages, such as Greenie-Bullie, Canary-Bullie, Redpoll-Bullie, Goldie-Bullie, and Bramble-Chaffie; and I am trying this season for Bullie-Chaffie (cock Bullie and hen Chaffie) I may say I have had young in shell with all these crosses except Bullie-Chaffie, and have had young hatched out with Redpoll-Bullie and Goldie-Bullie. This last season I had about six Goldie-Bullies. One, which I had in a nest of Mules, lived about a week. The next one I had was hatched under a Canary, but was "sat" by a Bullie hen until the day before the egg was due to hatch, and then transferred to a Canary; and when it was two days old was taken two miles away to a friend of mine (Mr. J. Lane), and hand-reared until it was five or six weeks old. Then I brought it home and moulted it. This last season I had six Bullie hens all sitting in nest pans like Canaries. I have one Bullie hen that was hand-reared which had eight nests this last season, and never egg-bound once. I have never lost a Bullie hen through egg-binding. Now just a little on Mule breeding—that is, with cock Finch and hen Canary, such as Goldfinch, Greenfinch, Linnet and Twite. I may say I have bred Mules from the Canary with all these, both off Yorkshire and Norwich hens. The best, no doubt, for size and shape, are those bred from Norwich hens. But I have bred fairly big Mules from Yorkshire hens. I have always picked large hens. They have mostly been dark Mules that I have bred, because my hens have not been inbred enough. There is no doubt that is the surest. I have great faith in Pea-throat Goldfinches and a good big hen Canary of either breed which has been bred clear for a season or two. I tried this last season with a Pea-throat and a big Yorkshire hen (a clear buff). I bred three off this pair, one dark one (variegated), and one which I thought was going to be a six-pointed, but has turned out to have both wings dark, and saddle backed. It is a big one. I think this pair will breed a clear one this time. Just a word here: always shut Goldie off each night before the hen lays, and always when the hen is sitting. I have also gone in for Yorkshire and Norwich breeding, and have won my gold medal for Yorkshires. But a more interesting and fascinating hobby I have yet to find than British bird keeping, and Mule and Hybrid breeding. It requires a great amount of patience. I would strongly impress this on you. I got fourth with my young Goldie-Bullie at the Crystal Palace (1912) Show, which I think was a good performance for a young bird; so did a few other well-known Hybrid breeders and British bird exhibitors whom I came across at the Palace. To my mind, there is more honour due to the breeder when he wins than to people who want all the honour by just being exhibitors, and never breeding a bird. Now, for Hybrid breeding, you want as near ideal birds as you can get, especially in the Goldie-Bullie cross. You want a good, large, shapely Goldfinch. The one I have bred mine with is now nearly three years old. I had him since he was a Greypate. He was the largest out of about twenty. As a year-old bird he took five 1sts in the open; and he took two 1sts this last season. I generally fix my nest pans in about two months before they are wanting to go to nest, so that they can get well used to them. Give them thorn buds, young dandelion, sunflower seeds, and wild seeds. I generally mix my own stock mixture—one part hemp, one part teazle, one part Germau rape, one part niger, one part charlock, one part linseed, one part maw, one part gold of pleasure, and two parts best Spanish canary seed. Just keep a look-out to see that all is well, and keep the birds as quiet as you can. I give them egg food twice a week, commencing about the second week in April. I think the Goldie-Bullie is the most beautiful of them all. As regards Bullie hens not sitting, I cannot say, as many do, that they are bad sitters. As I have said before, I have had six hens. All sat at once this last season. But I am aware they are not as good feeders as sitters. Still, I had a hen four years ago that sat on five Greenie eggs, hatched them all, and reared three, along with a Norwich cock to help her. I may say that I have all kinds of Finches at present. I hope these few lines will meet the eyes of those interested. If at first they don't succeed, they should try again.

Amongst the Wild Birds of Canada.

The Interesting Experiences of a Fancier "Out West."

Sir,—Permit me to conclude my notes on the above subject. I have heard many an English fancier say he was sorry he had not taken a few Linnets out with him to Canada. By-the bye, is it not a pity we cannot breed them in cages like the Canary? I have no doubt it can be done, but I suppose they are purchased so cheaply that fanciers do not think it worth their while to breed them and form a cage-bred strain. If this were so, Mule or Hybrid breeding would be a much more certain hobby. Goldfinches, of course, would be "a hard nut to crack." Personally, I have never seen a Goldfinch in Canada. The common house Sparrow, as cheeky and perky as ever, is there, and generally makes himself seen as soon as you leave the ship. I have never known him to winter farther north than Port Arthur; but down east he holds out somehow or the other. I have seen the small Robin in Ontario, but the Americau Robin is a big fellow, the size of a Thrush, with a good song, rounded and full. He is not so red on the breast, and is more subdued in colour all through. The species build fairly high up in any suitable tree and generally have a nest of five greenish-blue eggs. They like to take up their quarters near the habitations of man, and the nests are often found in the trees surrounding the house. In London, Ontario, a pair of American Robins built their nest in an ornamental fir tree, a few feet from the parlour windows of my house. I had a good look at the whole process of hatching and rearing, and the cock bird was very attentive to the hen. I have often wondered what relation these Robins are to our English Thrush. I should rather favour the idea of close relationship to the Thrush, as many of our English birds have brown bodies and red breasts. Take the Linnet, for instance. He sometimes assumes a magnificent breast of rusty red. The high feeding that can be got in the summer (as insect life is abundant in Canada) may account for the breast becoming red. The Robins take to cage life readily enough. That they are not a larger kind of our English Robin Redbreast I am convinced. Also I am certain they are not Thrushes, as we have Thrushes in Canada much the same as those in England. Therefore we must assume they are a species by themselves. But their ways are more like those of our English Thrush than of any bird I know. There is a bird about the size of the house Sparrow I have seen in Winnipeg. The cock is dark on the head, neck, and upper part of body; the belly is whitish, the thighs are darker; then the dark merges into almost white; the wings are dark slate colour, and so are the flights; the back, too, and the tail are dark slate colour—really black and white gradated. The hen is much the same as the cock, but she is not so large or so bright in plumage. I caught one of these birds (I have no idea of their name) and caged it. I fed it on mixed seeds—Canary, hemp, rape, and linseed. In a few months he settled down to home life in earnest. He sang the most wild song that ever I heard. He only sang in the early morning at dawn, and in the evening just before dark. I have heard the Indian war-whoop and the wild sounds of the West many years since; I have heard the prairie dogs, the prairie wolf, and various other prairie sounds, but this songster of mine seemed to incorporate all these weird sounds in his song. There was a thrilling wildness in his song that spoke of the "great lone land"—the lonesomeness of the Prairie. I had a Canary at the time, but I never heard my "prairie bird," as we called him, sing in chorus with "Dicky"; he preferred the hours when all was still, and when all the world was quiet, to sing his wild tunes. One or two trappers that I spoke to, and that heard the bird sing, said they had only heard the song in the very early morning or just before night—the same wild weird song that, with all its wildness, was sweet. He rarely sang if anyone was in the room, and never if there was the slightest noise. We often used to sit quietly in the dusk and hear our "prairie bird" sing. One night I heard him sing as usual. The next morning I unfortunately found him dead at the bottom of the cage. I think there is a much greater variety of birds in the Eastern Provinces than "up West." I once remember seeing a young man at West Toronto Junction, a few miles out from Toronto, unfold a red handkerchief at the station and try to sell a score or more of dead wild birds he had shot. Not one of them was larger than a Sparrow. There were Canaries, small Robins, a small brilliant blue bird (blue throughout except for a few black markings). Needless to say, he did not sell them. He was asked by a lady if he could not find a better way of spending his Saturday afternoons than wantonly destroying small song birds. He looked thoroughly ashamed of himself. Shortly after this a bye-law was passed protecting the wild birds in the breeding season. I could go on indefinitely describing the birds I have met with in Canada, but space does not permit.

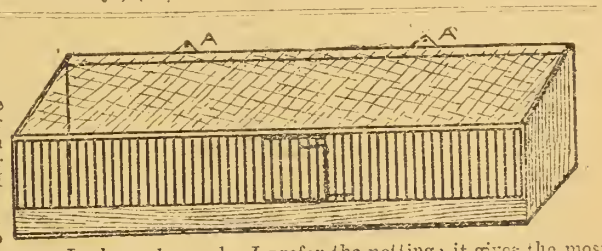
A Useful Home-made Lark Decker.



Sir,—I send you a home-made Lark decker or store cage for holding newly caught Larks, which might be useful for some of our Lark catchers or Lark lovers. I have kept this species in this kind of decker or run, which I have always found very useful; they keep the birds from injuring themselves, as Larks, when newly caught, have a great habit of jumping and bumping, and so hurting themselves. The idea I have tried to sketch is of a decker 4ft. long, 10in. broad, and 6in. high; the top is ½in. or ¾in. mesh netting, made of cotton the same as the mesh netting that window screens are made of. The top is a frame 1in. by ½in. all round, as shown in sketch. It is screwed on with three small screws on each side and end, so that it can be screwed off when cleaning or painting, when this is required. Canvas cloth or even a piece of wax flour cloth may be used. I prefer the netting; it gives the most light. "A" is a common piece of cage wire bent to the shape of an A; bend the wire to prongs (driven into the top of cage) as shown—to hang cage on wall. When holes are bored through the back of cage, the nails are very apt to cut and injure the Larks' heads when they are jumping about in the cage. The wires in front of the decker are ¾in. apart, so that the birds can get their heads through any part of cage to feed and drink quite easily.

Experiences with the "London Swell."

The Blackbird Gets a New Name.

Sir,—The Blackbird is one of the commonest of our British birds yet he is loved by thousands for his beautiful song. He is a favourite of the townsman as well as the cottager, for he is a most handsome bird, docile, and of a most pleasing manner. One could not find a nicer pet than the Blackbird; I have heard a good many fanciers call him the London Swell. Although of a bold nature, he soon takes to cage life, he is easy to hand-rear, and if you do rear one he will become one of the best of pets. I have reared a good many broods in my time, and have sold a good many for a good price. But they do require a good sized cage to keep themselves clean; one about two feet six inches long, about a foot wide and two feet six inches high, with plenty of sawdust or sand on bottom. What a contrast there is between his jet black colour and deep yellow beak and eye ere! When to this is added his deep whistling song, there is no wonder he is liked by so many; his song is charming indeed. Sometimes loud, sweet and low at other times. The only time he does not sing is when he is moulting. The Blackbird shows great ability in mimicking the song of other birds. I have had them mock the Robin, the piping of a Bullfinch or any other bird within hearing. The Blackbird is to be found in every nook and knell; no one part can claim it more than another; the nest is to be found in thick bushes and hedges, or under a stream bank on an overhanging willow, or a thick undergrowth. It is made outside of twigs, dry grass, and moss, and lined with dried leaves, straw and well plastered with mud and cow-dung and pieces of hay. The eggs laid are from four to six in number, and of a green-bluish colour, covered with brown spots. In hand-rearing them I would take them when about three parts fledged, and my first feed would consist of soaked bread squeezed nearly dry, and then a little milk poured on it, and a small white slug about every two hours; a little mashed potatoes and gravy will also be useful. Pears in season, currants, gooseberries and all the wild berries from hedgerows I also give. My staple food at one time was barley and pea meal, but I have found out long since that if I would keep them in health and condition I would have to follow nature, and through reading and digesting my esteemed friend Cage Birds I am glad to say now I am past all troubles re bird feeding, as I feed all soft-bills on a good brand of soft-food much advertised in Cage Birds.

A TRIO OF USEFUL SEED HOPPERS.

This Contribution is No. 3 of a practical and helpful series dealing with Bird-room Requisites and How they are Made.

THERE are all sorts of seed hoppers now on the market, some of them good and others—well, otherwise. In this article, however, we shall only deal with three, namely, two ordinary hoppers to hang outside the cage, and one self-supplying hopper, which is hung inside the cage, being especially suitable for the large flight we have already considered.

Must be More or Less Enclosed.

Now a seed-hopper to be of any use must be more or less enclosed, and not merely an open tin hooked on to the front; for if we are using one of these latter and fill it with a mixture of seeds containing, say, inga seeds, and offer it to a bird whose weakness is his love of inga seed, what will he do? He picks out all his favourite kind from the top layer, and comes to the conclusion that there is more underneath; so he carefully buries his beak in the mixture and gives his head a violent shake, when lo! a regular storm is scattered like hailstones over the bird room floor. But the remedy is simple. Put the seed in an enclosed hopper, and the "storm" will be returned upon the bird's own head to fall once more into its right receptacle.

The first hopper to be described is a wooden one with a sloping glass roof; the second is made of tin and is the sort of hopper now much in vogue, whilst the third is the self-supplying one.

The wood to be used for the first and last is three-ply (from tea chests) with the addition of a little stronger wood, which can be conveniently got from any packing case or box which happens to be at hand.

Fig. 1 shows the wooden hopper. The glass is, of course, to enable the bird to see exactly what seed he is going to eat; so that he won't be mistaken in selecting a rape seed when he wants a hemp! The fancier must judge for himself as to size, although for a single cage 5in. by 4in. by 2in. would be convenient and useful. The bottom had better be made first, and it should consist of a piece of wood from the packing case 4in. by 2in., so that it will be possible to nail on to it the three-ply, which should next be cut to form the sides, front and back. Glue should be used at the corners, and it will help matters if fine nails are also used to brace the hopper together, or even ordinary pins cut short and re sharpened with a file.

Two very narrow laths of wood (not shown in Fig. 1) should be glued upon the inside to carry the glass, which will be cut to the required size by any glazier for a copper; or if the fancier happens to be a photographer, or possesses a friend who dabbles in the art, he might easily cut his own glasses from waste negatives with a cheap glass-cutter. Pieces of wire must be driven into the three-ply, and bent to form hooks to hang on to the cage front.

Turning a Weakness to Account.

The kind of seed hopper the writer uses is shown in Fig. 2, and is made of tin with a glass front. With a hopper like this it is very easy to see exactly how low the seed gets without lifting it from its place. Large sheets of tin can be purchased from the tin-smith for a few pence; but there is yet a cheaper method, and that is to employ cocoa and syrup tins.

The writer has many weak points, and one of them is his love of Lyle's golden syrup, and stacks of tins (carefully emptied) existed upon the shelf in the store-cupboard in the hope that they might "come in" for something. Some were used for storing seed, but still there were more. At length he had a brilliant thought. The tops and bottoms were cut off and the cylinder thus left slit down at the seam, the tin flattened out and used for seed-hoppers. I will explain the manufacture.

Having flattened out the tin, which may be done with a flat-iron (stolen when nobody is looking), mark out the hopper as shown in Fig. 3, with a sharp nail or wire, and cut it out carefully with either a pair of tin-smith's snips or a strong pair of scissors. Bend it at the dotted lines, being watchful that all the enamelled part is upon the outside of the hopper. The little flanges are bent at right angles to act as a check for the glass. Cut out the sloping roof and bend as shown in Fig. 4; fix it into position and solder. If the fancier follows the directions already given on soldering he will find that a seed-hopper like this can be put together in next to no time.

The next step is to make the back (i.e., that part which butts against the cage front) and solder it into position. It is a good plan to double over about ¼in. off the top edge of this, so that "dickie" won't scrape his beard off with a sharp edge of tin when he is hunting for a millet seed.

The hopper is now nearing completion. Small L-shaped pieces of tin should be soldered upon the inside to prevent the glass from falling inwards; also short lengths of wire should be soldered on and bent into hooks to hold the hopper in position on the cage.

Covering up the Trail.

We don't want everybody to know that we make our appliances out of syrup tins, so that the outside should receive a couple of coats of glossy black lacquer, and then there's nothing to be ashamed of.

Nothing could be simpler than to make this hopper (unless, of course, it is to watch somebody else make it), and as there are many little articles to be made from syrup tins some of which are to be described in due course, my advice is: if you don't like syrup then get to like it, and don't throw away the tins.

It would take too long to describe in minute detail the self-supplying seed hopper. It would be unnecessary, also, as a few remarks and a sketch will be all that are required. Again, the size will be left to the fancier's own judgment, although a good one for this actual flight cage is 8in. long 7in. high and 4in. deep at the widest part. Fig. 5 shows a rough sketch of the completed hopper, and Fig. 6 a section. The sides should be cut first from three-ply with a fretsaw, and it will save time to nail the two pieces lightly together before beginning to saw; this method will ensure both sides being exactly alike. It will then be best to make the back of the chosen length with a shaped top.

In Fig. 6 the shaded portions represent the sections of strengthening cross-pieces, which should be made of a more substantial wood, to which the three-ply can be securely fastened; one of these is an oval perch, from which the birds can feed. A narrow feeding-trough, with a narrow rail of wood, is next fitted in the position shown, and two narrow laths glued to the sides to keep the glass from falling outwards. This latter is kept from actually touching the bottom of the trough by very small blocks of wood, one at each end, the height of which will have to be carefully adjusted by experiment with seed. The final step is to make the lid, which must be hinged on to the back cross-piece by means of leather hinges, which can be conveniently cut from an old kid glove. With regard to finish, my own are done with white bath enamel, but, of course, the maker must use his discretion and consult his own tastes.

How Waste may be Avoided.

Now it might be thought that seed poured in at the top would flow down into the trough and over the edge, and would continue to do so as long as seed was supplied from above; but this is not so. It will just fill the trough, and then the surplus will occupy the big reservoir above. As the birds feed from the trough more seed will fall down to take its place, and so on until all is exhausted. But in using a hopper like this a watchful eye should be kept upon the trough to see that it doesn't get choked up with husks. Some people might object to this as a wasteful hopper, thinking that the birds would be likely to scatter their seed, but as long as the trough is made narrow and shallow there will be little or no waste.

For aviaries and flight-cages a hopper like this is a great saver of time, and the fancier would find himself well repaid for the trouble taken in making it.

A Pictorial Panel,

Notes on the Trio of Beautiful Birds Depicted upon our Coloured Plate.

By H. J. FULLJAMES.

OUR journal, Cage Birds, has in the past presented to its readers some wonderful pictures, but I doubt if any issue of this or any other paper has ever been accompanied by such an exquisitely artistic production as the composite panel by the celebrated artist, Mr. Geo. Rankin, around which it is my privilege to write a few words.

Of course, it will be understood that my remarks are based only upon what I have learnt of the charming birds depicted, and not upon actual experience in their keeping, for though I have owned members of the same genus as each of the birds illustrated, I, like the vast majority of my readers, have never possessed a living specimen of either of the three species.

The Black-headed Wagtail.

This beautiful Wagtail (Motacilla melanocephala), a perfect embodiment of harmonious colouring and shapely grace, in general plumage resembles somewhat closely the Blue-headed Wagtail, the rarest of the Motacillae visiting our own shores as summer migrants. Its head, cheeks and neck are a deep, glossy black, and give it its name, the "Black-headed" Wagtail. The green of its back is considerably richer in tone than that of the Blue-headed, its yellow underparts are brighter, and it has no white on its throat, neither has it any buff eyebrow.

Unlike its near relative, which travels a journey of some thousands of miles in length, northward in spring and southward in autumn, the Black-headed Wagtail is found only within a comparatively limited region. It belongs exclusively to Southern Europe, Northern Africa, and Western Asia. It is said occasionally to reach as far as India, and a straggler or two is now and then reported as having been seen as far north as France and Belgium, but these records appear somewhat doubtful. It has many of the habits of our own well-known species, is fond of marshy meadows, and, like its relations, is often to be seen foraging for insects where cattle are grazing.

The Centre of the Panel.

Another resident in Southern Europe, Northern Africa, and Western Asia is Cetti's Warbler, Bradypterus cetti. This charming little bird, whose total length of five and a quarter inches is about equally divided between its tail feathers and its head, neck, and body together, occupies the centre of our panel. In general colour it may be described as a harmony in russet-brown, grey, and white; the tail feathers are graduated much after the style of the Grasshopper Warbler; these feathers are ten in number only, and in having this number instead of the usual twelve Cetti's Warbler stands alone in the whole family of Warblers.

In Southern Spain it is a fairly common bird, frequenting always bushes in the vicinity of water. As with the Black-headed of the Wagtails, so with the Cetti's among the Warblers, it may be found the year round in most parts within the scope of its distribution, and is said to sing all the year except during the annual moult. It would appear to resemble closely our Reed Warbler in its habits. It is of a very retiring nature, and therefore not easy of observation, although its song may be heard on every hand in the course of a walk along the river banks which it frequents. Like our Reed Warbler, also, it sings throughout the night, and it is at dusk and later in the evening that its merry, if not particularly musical, song is most to be appreciated.

The song of Cetti's Warbler is said to be unmistakable, and Seebohm describes it graphically as follows:—"The song is very loud, and almost startling in the suddenness of its commencement. It always begins with a loud spritz, a sort of trumpet-blast; then follow three or four rapid double notes, something like chit-up, chit-up, chit-up, but clear and full as the notes of the cornopean. Your first impression is that if it goes on it will beat the Nightingale hollow, but, alas! the song is over. These five or seven notes are repeated at intervals without variation. Cetti's Warbler has a superb voice, but no genius for music."

The Black-throated Wheatear.

Everybody knows the Wheatear of our downs and rocky places, the earliest of all our welcome visitors of the spring, but it has not been given to many of us to see in the life its relation (Saxicola melanoleuca), so beautifully drawn for us by Mr. Rankin. The Black-throated Wheatear is found throughout South-eastern Europe and North-eastern Africa, occasionally getting eastward into Asia as far as Persia and Yarkand. In Asia Minor it appears as a fairly common visitor.

As in our own Wheatear, there would seem to be two distinct kinds of Black-throated, and their habits on migration differ in a similar way—those which move the earlier travel the farther, staying only a short time in mid-journey, just as do our smaller Wheatears which pass along to breed farther north, while those which move in April remain in more southern localities. Like our bird, also, it favours mostly the open country districts and rocky places. Its nest, which usually contains four or five eggs, is placed generally in rocky crevices, often in the most inaccessible places. The bird is said to have a song which is comparable to that of our Wheatear, but shorter and not so strong. In its summer plumage of jet black and purest white it is a striking bird indeed, as may be gathered from its counterfeit presentment appearing in the right-hand portion of our panel.

A Somewhat Neglected Source.

When we consider the enormous number of foreign birds which are imported into this country from the uttermost ends of the earth, it seems strange indeed that there should be so few importations of the scores of beautiful species which are to be obtained nearer home. Of the birds which are to be found on the neighbouring continent of Europe there are many which are as beautiful in plumage as tropical birds, and which, while excelling in outward beauty their relatives which are familiar to us, possess quite as high a standard of musical ability as those which charm our ears in our own countryside. A collection of birds confined entirely to those which are known on the continent of Europe, which would include, of course, our own migratory birds and their relations which do not favour us with a visit, for example, the three beautiful birds above mentioned, would have an interest far surpassing that attaching to the keeping of a collection of sundry foreign birds.

Are Canary Breeders "Behind the Times"?

A Lecture
By E. JAMES
Before the Cardiff C.B.S.

In this discourse concerning the Yorkshire Canary the author puts forward some original views on various points.

MR. CHAIRMAN, and fellow members: I have been requested to give you my experiences in Canary breeding. I will do my best. I will call my paper, "Advice to Novices," or "How I got to the top."

Easy to Get What You Don't Want.

As regards the birds, go to a fancier who breeds his own winners, and put yourself in his hands. If any of you are like myself—not very flush with money—do as I did. My man wanted £2 10s. for his winning Yorkshire cock, so I bought its sister for 10s., thereby getting the same blood as the man who bought the cock bird at a fancy price. I bought three hens at 10s. each, sisters to Mr. Flynn's well-known winners; also one at the same price from another fancier; this was sister to a winning cock. I strongly advise you to get a cock bird with plenty of size; I mean length, etc. Beware of some of the so-called stock birds. Don't have any frills or flat heads. My experience of these stock birds was that they only bred stock birds. Mind to keep size in your eye all the time, as you will find it easy to breed small birds, but these never win. And don't think that a bird about 5¾ inches long is 7 inches, just because it is your own bird. Run it in a show cage; I find that if he can hold his head above the cross bar and is proportionately made, he will suit you. Choose the hen on the same lines. I don't believe in double-buffing or double-yellowing; to me this has been a waste of time, as I always got what I did not want.

I try to get two hens to suit every cock, and usually try two cocks to every hen. By this method you will find which suits best for the third round. You will also only get one nest of faulty young if you adopt this method. Keep the hens all [illegible] in the flights, and feed on plain canary seed, as I find that hens fed thus (not the fat ones) are the best to lay. If the cocks are singing loudly you can say they are in breeding form. If so, feed them the same. I don't believe in using maw seed one day and niger the next. They say maw is binding and niger the reverse. It seems to me like puncturing a tyre to put a patch on! When you see your hen flying from perch to perch and carrying feathers about, catch her and examine her. If she is nice and full, not showing her ribs, pair her up with the cock, not before. I have had cocks fertilise the eggs within 48 hours of laying.

When the hen has laid her third egg take the cock away, as he will only be wasting his strength, and don't return him to the hen until the young are 14 days old; then he will have plenty to do to help finish rearing the young.

Some Food Wrinkles.

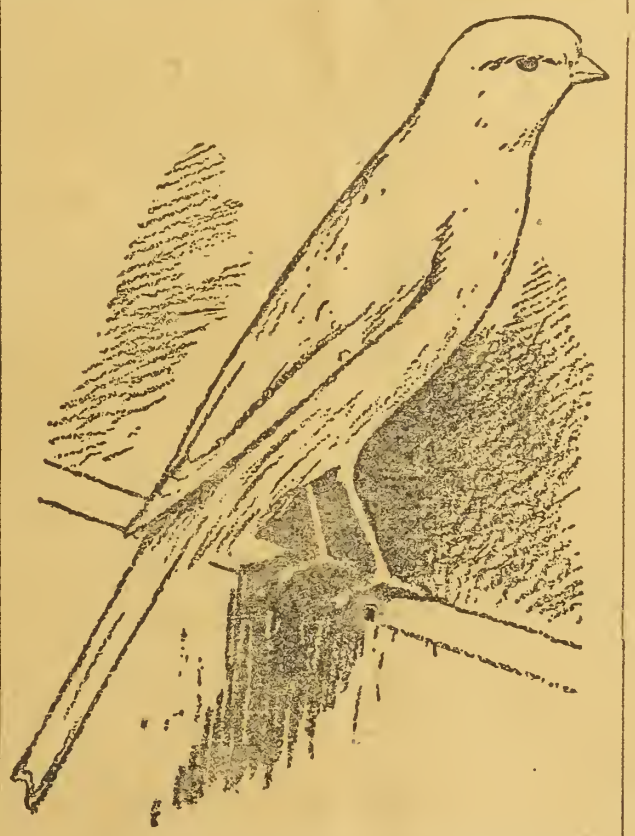
As regards food at this time, I put on hemp seed, not crushed; if the hen could only speak she would call you a fool for spoiling and wasting the oil in the seed by crushing it. Give, in another bottle, plain canary seed. I soak the rape for 24 hours before using it. I don't believe in scalding the rape, as it kills the germ in the seed. I give as much as they can eat of soaked rape. Some fanciers must have new laid eggs. The Chinese are fond of stale eggs, and if they won't hurt them I don't think they will hurt the birds. I always get good shop eggs. I also put all the crusts of bread in the oven. Bake them and roll them out like biscuits; you will find it will keep much fresher than bread. Use plenty of it with the eggs. I am not a great believer in eggs myself. I have used Indian meal with great success. I reared better young this way.

As regards green-food. I set a pennyworth of turnip seed in the garden, and found the tops were the best of green-food, as the birds ate the stems. Some fanciers buy water-cress every day; remember, some of it is grown on sewage farms. For change give chickweed or lettuce. Some fanciers believe in dandelion leaves. They say it is a good tonic; so it is; but I only go to the doctor when I am in need of a tonic. I find radish tops all right; the birds like them, and that is the main thing in Canary rearing. I have never lost any young birds when the parents were feeding well on green food. I try to get three or four hens off at the same time, and when the young are from four to five days old I sort out the small ones and ring them; then I put them in one nest so that they get a better chance. I find that four or five young do not want so much food to keep up heat as a nest of two; they seem to get on better, besides giving the old birds more to do, as I find it is the ones and twos that get half-starved. When they are old enough to part off I put them in a show cage and hang it on to the breeding cage. They will start training themselves and will never be frightened in a show cage afterwards.

The Success of the Lecturer's System.

When the hen has gone to nest again I take the cock and young and transfer them to another cage. If you only have two in one lot and, say, three with another hen, put them all with one cock. I always find that he will feed them; if the young are four, five or six in number, when feeding he will find any that are crying out. They also learn to feed themselves much quicker when they are together like this. You can now crush hemp and canary seed; also remember to give them some sand, as it helps them to digest their food. I give green food to them just the same, and water, as I think it is because you take it away that you lose so many of your young birds; the food is too dry. I rarely lose a bird after the young have left their parents. I have reared 250 in three seasons, only using about nine hens each season, so I don't think I have done badly with my system. Try and get them on hard seed at about 6 or 7 weeks old and leave them on it till the moult; they will grow bigger bones and will harden off a lot better than when kept on egg food. Remember, you don't give your baby the bottle when he can eat properly.

As regards colour feeding, I find that they eat the Indian meal mixed with dried bread and sugar. Mix this with the colour feed and they will eat it freely. Besides, it is much cheaper, which is a very big item to the working man. You can get a pound of Indian meal for a penny; note what a lovely sheen poultry and pigeons have on their feathers; they eat the corn. What if we could get the same on our Canaries! I find mine colour all right, also they have a good polish. I never take the seed away whilst colour feeding, as the birds go thin if you do, and you won't be able to get them into fit condition in time for showing; besides, it is cruel to keep the seed away. You can give egg-food for a change. I give soaked rape with both.



A SOUTH-COUNTRY LANCASHIRE PLAINHEAD.

Second Prize at the London and Provincial O.S. Show, for Mr. G. Thurling (London).

As to showing, I will take the First Feather shows first. I find it is the second round of young that come right for them, as the first round are too far gone into the moult. So train the second lot of young more than the others, and send them out. And if you get a first prize don't think you have got a Palace winner, as very often they get too big for showing after they are through the moult. If I had my way I would not hold young bird shows until after the moult; then we could show the best birds, as it often happens that some are not quite old enough and others are too far gone.

How to Deal with Eccentric Hens.

I would like to give you a tip about hens. There are some hens that will lay every six or seven weeks, but there are some forward young hens that will lay every four weeks and forsake their young to go to nest again. Now you must beat her or she will beat you, thereby losing her young. This is what I do: I give her a nest of eggs that have been sat on for a week, belonging to an old hen, so that when her own young are from two to three weeks old, those she will be rearing will be from three to four weeks old. I find this works all right. Now sort out the young birds. Pick out those that have got a good length of side; I mean birds with good long wings and still showing the sides, not birds with short wings and showing half the back. The long-sided birds are the birds that will make show birds, so look after them. You can sell the short-sided birds as songsters. The long-sided birds will keep on improving, but I have never seen [illegible] yet. I believe in "tailing" them, to get the extra length.

When you have sent to a show and lost, don't be downhearted. If you don't win, try again. There may be better birds of the same style as yours; or it may be that yours have not the style the judge likes, as I find that the judges vary, some seeming to have a style of their own. In such case send to another show; you will then probably drop on the judge whom your birds suit. Then follow him around. You will have in your room birds that suit some judges and not others. Why it is, I don't know. We have got a standard to breed to in both the Yorkshire C.C. and the Southern Yorkshire C.C., and points to make 100 for an ideal bird. I have not seen the bird that will make 100 points yet; so we have enough to do without trying to breed to suit the judges. My advice is: Try and breed to the standard, then some day we may even educate some of the judges, as it is we who have to pay the piper, and he calls the tune. I have won 70 prizes this year, so I can safely say I am beginning to know what suits certain judges.

Now let me pass on to disposing of your birds, which to a working man is a very important thing, as he cannot go far without money. When a man comes to you don't look at him like the "spider at the fly," and wonder how much you can charge him; treat him fairly, and remember that one bad word goes farther than twenty good words do. If he is a novice, help him to choose, and mind properly to match the birds for him. Never let him have two birds with the same fault. Some of the best chums I have in the fancy are men I have taken money from for birds. Some of my bad friends are men I have not spent money with or taken money from. It seems strange, but it is so.

I believe that we Canary fanciers are 20 years behind the times; not the birds, but ourselves. Poultry breeders get fancy prices for their eggs; dog fanciers get fancy sums as stud fees even after their dogs have ceased to win prizes. We could do both, and we don't do either. To me it is quite possible in a proper cage.

How to Catch Tree-Creepers.

The nature and habits of the Tree-creeper are such that the ordinary methods of bird-catching are of little or no avail. Being a solitary species, a decoy would only be effective during the pairing season, at which time taking them is justifiably illegal. And any form of baited trap or net would be useless, as this bird is never seen on the ground. I have succeeded in taking one, by boring a series of holes in the trunk of a tree, and inserting esparto grasses therein, arranging them horizontally and in a manner which precluded the bird's ascension without coming in contact with same. But I cannot recommend this method, as I found that all the flies in the locality were apparently attracted by the lime, and getting on, they made a buzzing which had a similar effect on a lot of Blue, Coal, and Great Tits, which soon exhausted the grass, and incidentally my patience.

Convinced that this waiting game was simply an exemplification of the saying "Ars longa, vita brevis," I tried another plan, and found it so successful that I have now no difficulty in taking the Creeper.

The effectiveness of this method is due to the peculiar habit common to the species of visiting each tree strictly in rotation, never going to the same tree twice. Now, in a wood we cannot, of course, be sure as to which direction he will take, but in an avenue where trees occur in a single or double line this difficulty is removed, and it is only necessary to ascertain the direction in which he is progressing to be tolerably certain that the next tree in that direction will also be visited.

I therefore ensconce myself at the base, screening myself, if possible, with a leafy branch, and with rod held in readiness, I await the bird's coming. As he invariably begins his ascent from the very base, continuing same by a series of zig-zags and circles, an opportunity is generally afforded to bring the "touch down" into operation.

One word of caution: Don't be tempted to rush matters. If the bird should be at the other side of the trunk, don't go hunting after him; rather let him have that tree to himself, and proceed quietly to the next, as although the Creeper allows a very close approach, he seems instinctively to know when he is being hunted, and proceeds to put space between himself and his pursuer. Another word of advice: Don't imagine that all 'Creepers are alike. Time was when it was only necessary that the bird should be a 'Creeper, but now he has to be a good 'Creeper to win in his (the small insectivorous bird) class, especially if minus the prefix "resident."

Always Study the Show Points.

Now it is not my intention to describe the various points which, combined, go to make up an excellent specimen of a given species, but I would strongly advise the novice to make a study of the different features, and when (as is quite possible in the manner of taking just described) the necessity for withholding the rod arises, don't hesitate to do so. That is my reason for carrying field glasses. It is not always possible to prevent the mediocre specimen getting caught, but there can be no excuse for retaining a bird which will never be worth the trouble, to say nothing of the expense entailed. How often the average amateur's stock merits this description of mediocre! You who are experts know; to you therefore I say, advise the liberation of such birds, as the amateur's hopes are centred in them, and "hope deferred maketh the heart sick."

The stock cage should be of box pattern, and lined both sides and back with virgin cork. By having a slot in the top of the cage, a spare (cloth lined) back may be inserted, and the back proper removed; this permits of food being placed in crevices of the bark, where it will be readily found by the bird, as this species has a decided aversion to coming on to the cage bottom. The water vessel should be accessible from the back for the same reason.

My reason for such injunctions is that during over thirty years' study of wild birds in their native haunts I have never seen a Tree-Creeper on the ground. Even on the two occasions on which I have witnessed the bird bathing, advantage was taken of a pool formed in a crevice, and a partly submerged stump. For this reason I always place a piece of bark upright in a 'Creeper's bath, and gradually accustom him to same as before described.

Picking Out the Young Cocks.

For ten years I have found this a good method of picking out the young cocks from the hens, when all your youngsters are together in flight cages or aviaries. Take a rough piece of earthenware (a jug or jar will do), and scrape gently on it with a knife or spoon. The noise you make will be "followed" by all the young cocks, that is to say, it will start them off warbling by way of rivalry. I always pick out my young cocks in this way.—J. Peters (170, Manchester Road West, Little Hulton, near Bolton).

Soaking and Washing Rape Seed.

An efficient receptacle (cost nil) for soaking and washing rape seed can be made as follows. Take any round tin (treacle tin answers well), and with a bradawl perforate the lid and bottom with a number of small holes. Simply put the amount of seed required in tin, replace lid, and place it in a jar or jug, and cover with water, fresh daily. When required for use, take tin from jar, remove lid and hold under tap. By this means you will thoroughly wash the seed, as water runs through the seed and out the holes in bottom of tin, thus ensuring it being perfectly sweet—a most important thing for rearing young Canaries.—H. Simmonds (11, Hydethorpe Road, Balham, S.W.).

To Keep Egg Food from Going Sour.

Fanciers who make their own egg food should, when it is prepared, put it on a shallow tin, inside the oven. Leave there until crisp. This is useful if the whole is not being used, as by doing so it will keep any length of time. A little moisture will be required when it is being given the hens.—F. Litchfield (102, Northampton Road, Market Harboro').

Economy in the Use of Eggs.

Those breeders who only pair one or two pairs of birds up in a season, and do not require a whole egg at the time the young are first hatched, will find that if the egg is cut in half and the half not wanted is placed cut side down in a cup of oatmeal, it will keep fresh, even if you do not use it for the next 24 hours. I have tried this several seasons, and always find it keeps beautifully fresh.—W. Lidgett (58, Milner Street, Newark).

Mixed Breeding in Aviaries.

When breeding in aviaries with a mixed collection of birds, it is a good plan to hang up the nesting-pans in single breeding or other smaller cages. Then, when the hen is sitting she can be shut off and fed alone, if she is worried by the other birds.—A. B. Ellis (Meath Cottage, Ottershaw, Chertsey).

Making the Hens Feed.

Several breeders are worried by having hens feed their young well until they are about ten days old, when they begin to neglect their maternal duties and think of building again. Do not begin artificial feeding, as the continual disturbing of the hen will often send her off feeding altogether, but just drop a piece of Glauber salt, about the size of a pea, into the drinking water, and shortly afterwards the hen will be feeding as well as ever.—C. R. W. Taylor (Clapham Common).

Kills, but Cleanses.

During the breeding season keep a quart bottle full of water with a little alum, about the size of an ordinary marble, crushed and dissolved in it. Place this water in the cage as a bath. It not only cleanses the birds but kills the little bloodsuckers, commonly known as red mites.—A. Dennis (Cudworth).

Cheap Varnish for Cages.

When you have stained your cages with any of the following: Walnut: 1oz. vandyke brown, ¼ pt. spirit of ammonia; or 1d. permanganate of potash, 1 pint of water. Mahogany: 2oz. venetian red, ½oz. glue, 1 pint of water; prepare in the ordinary way a thin solution of glue and apply with a varnish brush—it gives a hard, glossy, finish and is, of course, cheaper than varnish.—T. J. Smith (Nottingham).

Two in One.

Now that shepherd's purse is coming along, fanciers should be careful in giving it to sitting hens. Most hens cannot seem to resist dragging it into the nest, and you not only have to risk the eggs getting cold, but after it has been sat on for a short time the stem gets dry and stiff, like wire, and is very likely to puncture the eggs. Another useful tip is, when the sliding door does not run quite smoothly, rub a little powder blacklead on where the wires pinch.—W. H. Pyke (Reading).

The Best of the Canary Tribe.

A lecture given by Mr. T. Hawley, of Hanley, before the Longton and District C.B.S.

Gentlemen: I have much pleasure in giving you a lecture on what I term "the best of the Canary tribe," that is, the Yorkshire. But, of course, we all make more "fuss" of one variety than of another.

In the first place I should always advise a new beginner to get his stock from one breeder, and one breeder only; then if things do not turn out all right in the breeding-room, he can see what is wrong; and I am sure if there is a fault in a person's strain it runs all through their stock. You must remember that even the best birds fail in some point or other. The secret of my little success with Yorkshires is having good hens, especially those bred in my own room. If I have to buy anything I always try to get it early, so that it can get accustomed to my mode of feeding, as no two fanciers feed and manage their birds alike. I like to have size on the cock's side and plenty of colour. I have found that the big hens we sometimes see are of no use as feeders; they are idle in their duties in the hot weather, and I am sure they only lie in the nest pan and "sweat" anything that happens to be under them.

The Wagtail Type.

The type of Yorkshire I prefer is what I call "the Wagtail type"; that is, with as much behind the leg as there is in front, or a little bit more if you can get it. Some years ago, when I got my strain from Mr. F. Bate, I saw stock birds there—cocks in particular—that looked to me like Game Bantam cocks, sleek in build, and ever so long on the leg, especially the Green marked strain that he had; and I am sure his was the best Yorkshire room for many miles around here. But I saw no big, heavy hens, such as we sometimes see knocking about.

I shall always advise using the old-fashioned lime for all breeding and stock cages, as I find that when the birds bathe the cages dry quicker when limed-washed, and you get a nice healthy aroma that you do not get from enamelled or distempered cages.

Biscuit Found to be Best.

In feeding young birds, I use egg and Osborne biscuit.—Some of you may say: Why Osborne biscuit? Well, I used bread one season, but I got such a lot left every time that I went back to the biscuit; I am sure it is best, although it is not the cheapest. I do not use dandelion, as I am sure it is too forcing; and I have not yet seen a forced bird that moulted out a good one. I like to use soaked rape, shepherd's purse, and young lettuce, and, of course, the usual Canary and hemp seeds, and egg and biscuit. I always try to get the cock to feed the young as well as the hen, as without a doubt two are better than one at that game, providing he is what I call "a worker."

I always like, if possible, to do without a nursery cage, as the young birds never seem to come on any better when put in those things. I think if fanciers will take the young away when about 24 or 25 days of age, the birds will come on all-right if you will give them the usual egg and biscuit, some cracked canary and hemp seed. During this period I like to use a few groats, as they are very flesh forming, and I am sure they help a little to keep inflammation down, which is often much in evidence about this time.

I always mate my birds up the usual way—yellow and buff together, as I do not think there is anything to be gained in double buffing or double yellowing, unless you have an extra big stock to breed with. I find the best way when you have your birds together is to put nest pan and building material in at the same time. I have had birds that have been afraid of the pan for about a week, so it would be awkward if you put it off till the hen wanted to lay. I am sure that is one of the reasons why young hens lay their eggs on cage floors.

Let them Hunt Around.

There is one other thing to watch—see that you allow plenty of cage room in cold weather. Also give your mixed seed on the cage bottom, as it causes the birds to hunt round, same as fowls do; and you will find they will be all the better for it when breeding time comes.

As regards keeping show birds in condition, I know of nothing better than a little egg and biscuit sprinkled with maw seed; also the use of cold water baths, and I am sure that birds given the bath when young, will take a dip whenever you put a bath on for them. It is also one of my pet ways of telling when my birds are thoroughly well, as when I see they do not rush for it, I think to myself: hello, there is one there I shall have to keep my eye on.

A failing with a lot of new beginners is that they have not sufficient patience, especially with unflighted birds. I have found the birds sometimes of no use at all one season, while the next they could not go wrong. I always say that you cannot give a hen Canary a "character," because she will do well in one place, but not so in another, even in the same room; so you must try to humour them a bit with bits of green food, etc.

I do not reckon myself an authority on these subjects, and you must remember that I have only had about seven years' experience, but I am sure that if fanciers (novices in particular) would visit one another more they would learn more in a short time than two or three lectures could teach them, as then they could see for themselves the working of the ideas. I thank you for the patient hearing you have given me, and I hope there has been at least one little tip that some of you have heard that will prove valuable.

No 584.

For Amateur Cage-makers.

Sent by Mr. E. J. Thirsk, 82, Bright Street, Hull.

Enclosed is a sketch of a wood "stop" I adopt when wishing to dress the edges of thin boards, when a vice is not handy. The dots indicate spring holes, and when the device is fastened to table top I have always found it very handy to dress up any length up to 4ft. It can be made in any size, of course, to suit the kind of wood one is likely to work. If the wood which requires the edges dressing is thinner than the slot in the "stop," this difficulty can be overcome and by packing it a bit, so that the boards are made to fit in quite tight.—E. J. Thirsk.

When Using Loose Fronts.

Sent by Mr. W. H. Seal, Ancaster, Grantham.

The accompanying sketch illustrates a simple, yet effective device to prevent loose wire fronts from being accidentally removed. It is particularly useful to the fancier whose cages are not fitted with a top rail. Place the front in position in the cage, and with a pair of pliers cut off the projecting wires level with the cage top. Now take a piece of punched bar, cut off about three quarters of an inch, leaving a hole in the centre. Then take a nail with a good head, and nail the piece of punch bar to the cage top near the projecting wire of the cage front. Clinch the nail on the inside of the cage to prevent the bar from slipping out of place. I think the sketch will make the matter clear.—W. H. Seal.

THE HEN BULLFINCH AS A HYBRID BREEDER.

— By —
E. A. MORRIS
(Ilford.)

A thoroughly practical article on a branch of the Fancy in which the Novice stands equal to the Champion as regards his chances of success.

IN penning this article on one of the most interesting and fascinating branches of aviculture, viz., hybrid breeding, I intend only to deal with the section which claims the hen Bullfinch as one of the prospective parents; and I will attempt to make as clear as I possibly can my method of procedure in producing such hybrids. It does not require an experienced ornithologist to succeed. The "novice" stands the same chance of producing an exhibition specimen as the "champion," and I doubt very much if there is any other branch of the Fancy in which this applies, providing the specimens are bred by the exhibitor. The pairing to produce an exhibition hybrid is not such an important consideration as the pairing of Canaries to breed a champion, but naturally one would select British birds required for breeding with plenty of size, combined with good colour and markings.

A Vote for the British Hen.

Much has already been written concerning the hen Bullfinch. Some fanciers prefer the Siberian; others the German hand-reared bird. But from personal experience I prefer the British hen. I must admit you do not get the size in the progeny that you get when the Siberian is used, but I trust the time is not far distant when there will be separate classes provided at our shows for Hybrids bred from British birds and foreigners. No doubt much trouble would arise in determining the nationality of the birds in question, but already we have these troubles in several of our British Bird classes. Take the Bullfinch, Waxwing, Bearded Reedling, etc., as instances. I doubt if a Goldfinch bred in England between two Siberians would meet with much success on the show bench exhibited in the British Goldfinch class. Therefore, why should hybrids bred from two Siberians be allowed to compete in classes provided for "hybrids bred between two British birds"?

When British birds are used it is advisable, if possible, to obtain first-year birds, i.e., birds that have not bred previous to being caught. By this method I have had far better results than when using older hens. I usually purchase about October or November the number of hens I require. These I turn into an aviary, in which I run a few Goldfinches, Linnets, Greenfinches and Redpolls, these being the most likely to give the best results. I have never attempted to breed hybrids in cages; I prefer to breed them in outdoor aviaries, and I may say I have never failed to breed and rear a hybrid or two each season I have tried. I also prefer to give each pair of birds separate compartments. About January I single each pair off and put them in their respective breeding quarters.

Mr. Morris' hen Bullfinch building in an ordinary nest-pan.

The Indispensable Canary.

When breeding hybrids, it is necessary to keep several pairs of Canaries for hatching and rearing purposes, although it is not unusual for a hen Bullfinch to sit on and hatch her eggs in confinement. I once had a hen hatch and rear a nest of Goldfinch Mules to five days old, when I put them under a Canary.

As the Bullie is a rather late breeder, it is advisable to start your hen Canaries breeding as late as possible, so as to have them nesting about the end of July and the beginning of August. I believe there are more hybrids hatched in July and August than in the previous months. As a staple food I use two parts Canary to one part of the following: Linseed, hemp, niger, teazle, German rape. I also give a few sunflower seeds occasionally. As early as I possibly can I gather as much wild seed as possible, such as shepherd's purse, dandelion, plantain, dock, etc., which I give ad lib. Those fanciers who are not acquainted with the various wild seeds should procure the splendid coloured plate illustrating them, which was published in CAGE BIRDS some time ago.

To Encourage Hens to Nest.

To encourage the birds to nest I fix up an old Blackbird's or Thrush's nest in the aviary, and supply them with plenty of dried grass, small twigs, dried roots, horse hair, etc. Last season I had a hen Bullie make her nest in an ordinary nest pen, with dried stems of shepherd's purse, as the accompanying sketch shows. The birds should be supplied with plenty of grit, such as old mortar, etc., as a safeguard against soft-shelled eggs.

When they were allowed plenty of room, I have never experienced much trouble with the cock birds interfering with the eggs. It is a good plan to have plenty of hay or sawdust on the bottom of the cage or aviary, as some hens have a peculiar habit of laying their eggs from the perch, even after they have constructed a good nest. I strongly warn fanciers against keeping a cock Bullfinch within hearing of the hens.

After the hen has laid her clutch of eggs, I allow her to sit for about 10 to 14 days on dummies, so as to give her a rest before commencing on her next round. A hen Bullfinch usually lays a clutch of four or five eggs, but it is not at all uncommon for them to lay six eggs in one nest.

The Way to Rear Hybrids.

The rearing of young hybrids is by no means an easy matter, even when you are the possessor of a really good strain of feeding hen Canaries. A Canary and Bullfinch differ considerably in their methods of feeding; the former feeds entirely from the crop and the latter from the bill, the food consisting chiefly of insect life. No doubt the best and most successful way of rearing young hybrids would be to put the eggs in a Bullfinch's or Chaffinch's nest, and hand-rear the young after they were about ten days old, but, of course, this method could not be adopted with a great amount of safety unless you were situated in a locality where you could keep an eye on the nests.

As the Bullfinch feeds its young chiefly on insect life, we must supply the Canaries used for rearing the hybrids (in addition to the usual egg food) with a few mealworms, or live ants' eggs, if procurable. I know some hens do not take to eating mealworms very readily, but if the mealworms are chopped up and mixed with the egg food this little difficulty will soon be overcome. My hens usually prefer the mealworms to the egg food, when once they get the flavour.

A Trouble to Mother!

Unlike most fanciers, I give green food immediately the young are hatched, such as shepherd's purse and plantain, the former harbouring a large percentage of minute insect life, which is very essential to the rearing of young hybrids.

Needless almost to say, the hen should not be disturbed more than is absolutely necessary—just a peep morning and evening to see that none are dead is all that is needed. Those fanciers who have been successful in rearing young hybrids, and who have watched their Canaries feed, will, I think, agree with me, that it is a more laborious task for the hens than hatching young Canaries. While the latter keep themselves fairly stationary when being fed, young hybrids move their heads rapidly, which causes the hen a great deal of trouble. They also require feeding more frequently than Canaries, the food passing into the body almost as soon as they are fed, while it is retained in the crop of young Canaries for a considerable time.

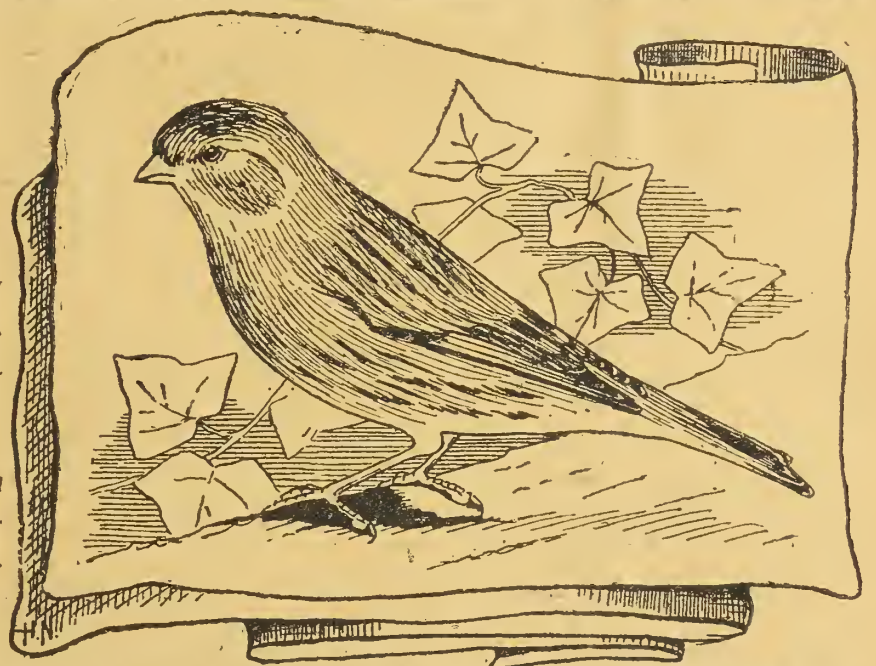
When possible, it is a good plan to set one or two hens at the same time as you set the hybrid eggs, so that in the event of only one hybrid hatching, it can be placed in a nest with one or two Canaries about its own age, where it will stand more chance of being reared than if in a nest alone.

I am pleased to see this particular section of the Fancy making such rapid progress, and I trust this article will tend to bring new recruits to our ranks. I intend this season to attempt to breed a few hybrids yet unknown, viz., the Siskin-Bullfinch and Hawfinch-Bullfinch. I see no reason why the Siskin-Bullfinch should not be produced. The Goldie-Bullie is fairly common on the show bench, and the Siskin is a member of the same family. Another cross I consider worth attempting is the Goldie-Chaffinch, which, no doubt, would be one of the most attractive hybrids ever produced. Patience is a virtue!

LITTLE, BUT GOOD.

The Redpoll-Canary is a tiny fellow, but engaging in manner, a sweet songster, and a favourite with most Mule breeders.

Sketched from the specimen 2nd at the Crystal Palace Show for Mr. W. Buckingham (Watford).



The Nest of the Humming Bird.

In describing a photograph of a Humming Bird's nest in "Country Life," Mr. A. E. Wilson writes:—The nest was built in the month of April on the forked twig of a small rose tree, in a garden, close to the carriage drive; the mother bird, when sitting on her eggs, showed no fear, and sat perfectly still while people and carriages passed within a few inches of her. As soon as the young were hatched, the mother carried on her arduous task of feeding, for baby Humming Birds fight as greedily for their food as a brood of young Thrushes in England. She darted and hovered over them, keeping up a constant whirring sound with her well-nigh invisible wings, for she never for an instant perched on the side of the nest, as she dashed first to one gaping beak and then to another. During this operation she certainly appeared to fly backwards very often, though, I believe, some authorities deny the power to do so to any birds. Humming Birds build year after year in the same garden if undisturbed.

The Food of the Skylark.

It may be of interest (writes Mr. John Hammond in "Country Life") to state briefly the results obtained by an investigation of the food of the Lark carried on throughout last year by means of an examination of the contents of the stomach of a number of these birds. The birds dealt with came from Norfolk, Essex, and Cambridgeshire. Altogether the stomach contents of some hundred and fifty-six Larks (not including the young) were examined. Of these one hundred and forty-eight contained weed seed, of which a large portion were polygonum aviculare (knot-grass), polygonum convolvulus (black bindweed) chenopodium album (fat hen) and poppy. It was found that this staple article of diet was eked out in the spring and summer months by insects (for the most part weevils, caterpillars, aphides, turnip flea beetles, spiders, carabid beetles and click beetles), but not a single wireworm was discovered. It was noticed that the young were fed almost entirely on insects. During the winter months, however, many pieces of green leaf were taken, which consisted for the most part of clover, wheat and rye grass. As an example, in the month of February thirty per cent. of the birds examined contained the leaves of some crop in their gizzards. Seed corn was taken to a small extent, but not in sufficient quantity to be of importance. Much corn was taken from the stubbles: but this is of no account economically. It was found, also, that large quantities of "small seeds" (clover and rye-grass) were taken soon after they had been sown. E. Newstead gives details of the stomach contents of a few Larks killed in Cheshire. Grass, various kinds of beetles, spiders, and several kinds of weed seeds were found.

An Appreciation of the Parrot.

Parrots possess in greater or less degree a love of mimicry and wonderful imitative power that have made them through the ages the favourite of man (writes Mr. Geo. Jennison in the "Manchester Guardian"). Rare is the savage tribe that has not tamed the Parrot and taught it human speech. Many birds are good mimics, but only few, and these with difficulty, reproduce the human voice. The Parrot endowed by nature with a fleshy and most mobile tongue and mandibles well hollowed as a sounding board is in a class apart. Ctesias in 401 B.C. describes a Parrakeet that could speak an Indian language and could learn Greek. The "Indian bird" was popular in Greece, and was worshipped to excess in imperial Rome. Once healthily established, they live long; trustworthy evidence shows one century and many jubilees among Parrots. The London Zoo has a Great Vasa Parrot of 55 years. I have many of over 20 years, and some from beyond the memory of a keep with 40 years' service. Why do Parrots talk? Never, I think, because they understand what they say; often from vanity and to attract attention; oftenest to amuse themselves. They speak best at morning and evening, and prefer to be alone. About 6 p.m. on a quiet summer evening every Parrot in our aviary is screeching in light-hearted joy. Then, approaching silent and unseen, you may hear every word of their vocabulary. Give but an inkling of your presence, and all is silent. Curiosity dominates the flock. Ignorance of this has put many a vainglorious Parrot-keeper on a level with fisherman in the eyes of sceptical friends. Aristotle was informed that Parrots were more loquacious when drunken. Like many other animals and birds, they are not averse from fermented liquor. The hanging Parrots of Malaysia are found intoxicated, as are the palm civets and the flying foxes, beneath the gourds that catch the "toddy wine." Nothing can surpass the beauty of Parrots flying at large. They are homed on Australasian farms. "They amuse themselves for hours," writes a friend in New Zealand, "sliding down the tin roofs of the shanties. And one quite up to date accompanied my daughter to the golf links, flying round with evident interest, and finally alighting to seize and throw the ball over its head."

NEW CROSS AND DIST. C.B.S.

Meeting held People's Hall, Tanners' Hill, Deptford, 4th April, Mr. Hill in chair. A lot of business was done. Proposed, that we ask the Woolwich and Plumstead C.B.S. to join us in our ramble to Kildenboro' on Sunday, 12th May, and so keep up the friendly spirit of the bird fancy. The three cups were on view, one for most points Novice Yorkshire at July show, one for best unflighted Border at annual show, and one for most points gained through 1912, 4 birds being nominated for same. Seven 2/6 specials were received for July show, and it was decided that we purchase silver spoons to the value of same. A good schedule for June and July young stock shows was drawn up, and we hope members who have been successful with young birds will make good entries.—Barton and Barton, Joint Hon. Secs.

CITY AND SUBURBAN A.C.B.

Meeting held April 22nd, at 60, Paddington Street, when there were present Mr. W. A. Shepherd (in chair), Mr. Dickinson (Hon. Sec.) and about 20 members. One new member was elected and two nominations were received. The accounts for last pair show were approved. The two delegates to the Federation reported that it was intended raising the subscription from 1d. per member to 2d. per member. After discussion it was moved by Mr. Curtis and seconded that the increased subscription be paid, provided all other affiliated societies agreed. A series of questions, drawn up by Mr. Curtis, specially applicable to the breeding season, were then handed to members and very ably answered, several very useful hints being given for the feeding and rearing of young birds. The Chairman and members gave a hearty welcome to Mrs. L. M. Thynne on her re-appearance after her recent severe illness.—F. Thynne, Assist. Hon. Sec.

YORKSHIRE UNION OF C.B.S.

Bolton Woods C.B.S. and the Annual Ballot.

Special meeting of Council, April 13th, to deal with the question raised by Mr. M. Skirrow, on behalf of the Bolton Woods Society, wherein certain charges were made against Union officials in respect to the published results of the annual ballot, this correspondence appearing in the issue of CAGE BIRDS, dated March 16th. All the eight members of the above society, who were present at the meeting when the resolution was passed to send the correspondence to the Press, were notified to attend the Council meeting, with the result that six of them responded to the invitation; one could not attend because he was working, and another because of other business. Mr. H. H. Towers (President) occupied the chair, and after correspondence had been read, it was decided to deal with the charges made anent this year's ballot first, in order that they should not be complicated with those referring to the ballot of two years ago. The whole thing was thoroughly thrashed out by the Council, who unanimously came to the conclusion that in the first place Mr. Skirrow had been led astray by members of his society, who, being members of other Union societies, had reported to him on hearsay evidence only the number of votes he had obtained; and, secondly, this, combined with the fact that the ballot paper from the Shipley Society was returned as a spoilt paper had upset their calculations altogether, this being one of the papers they were reckoning on; and had Mr. Skirrow written to the Union Secretary and ascertained the full facts, before rushing into print on the subject, there would have been no necessity to level accusations against Messrs. H. Hill, F. Hammond, and W. Blakey, in respect to the published results of the annual ballot. It was also proved that the statements made in respect to the ballot of two years ago were inaccurate, as no person putting up for any position on the Council had 8 votes recorded; in fact, when the name of the individual concerned was mentioned, it turned out that the ballot referred to took place three years ago, and he had then 24 votes recorded to him, and not 8, as stated. The Council then decided that the statements published March 16th should be as publicly withdrawn as they had been made, and instructed Messrs. H. Hill, F. Hammond, and W. Blakey to draw up a statement and submit it to the eight persons concerned, in order that they might attach their signatures, and then publish it; also that each of them should equally share in defraying the expenses of the meeting, failing which they would be further dealt with. A vote of entire confidence in the Union officials was unanimously carried by the Council, along with a request that the Secretary should publish a full list of votes recorded at the last ballot for each official position, in order that each member of the Union should be thoroughly satisfied that it had been carried through in a satisfactory manner. Below is a tabulated result of the voting for officials. Allowance must be made in case of any slight error, as many of the ballot papers could only be distinguished by the post-mark, and as many of these are from the Bradford District, it was largely speculative in many instances as to which society they belonged to. However, I think they will be found very near the mark. Two spoilt papers were returned—one from Shipley O.S., the other from Wibsey C.B.S., and three societies refrained from voting, namely, Gt. Horton Good Intent, Denholme and Thornton, and Keighley.—H. Hill, Sec.

Meeting held April 16th, Co-op Rooms, Mr. G. H. Lee presiding. Arrangements for season's members' shows completed: Mr. J. Bailey to judge first Feather show, held June 29th; Mr. J. Greaves to judge second F.F. show, July 27th. Mr. H. Sutcliffe judges our first old bird show, Oct. 26th; Mr. W. A. Cowgill, the second, on Nov. 23rd; and Mr. H. W. Walsh judges our Boxing Day Show. Four members have retired, and we have elected seven new ones, leaving us an increase of three. The season promises to be a good one, and keen competition is expected. It is likely we shall see a good number of entries at each show. Schedules are now in the hands of our secretary, and will be sent out immediately.—A. Livesey, Sec.

WINDSOR AND DIST. C.B.A.

On April 11th members and friends enjoyed a very pleasant evening at Star and Garter Hotel, Peascod-street. The chairman (Mr. W. G. King) provided and arranged a grand Bohemian concert. Mr. Councillor W. Carter, one of the vice-presidents, occupied the chair. The programme items were rendered in an admirable manner by Messrs. Keen, Malcolm Boyle, W. R. King, Harry Field (Corporal-Major 2nd Life Guards), G. King, H. B. Louch, G. Minett, Raffs. Messrs. Geo. King and Minett made very able pianists. The entertainment concluded with the usual thanks to the artistes. A vote of thanks to Mr. Carter for occupying the chair and the singing of "God Save the King," terminated a pleasant gathering.—E. A. Stickland, Sec.

GLYDEBANK AND DIST. C.B.C.

Meeting held Higgins Hall, April 18th, when there was a good turn-out of members to hear a lecture by our worthy president, Mr. Robb, on the Linnet and Goldfinch. He said he would speak on the Goldfinch alone, and advised any member purchasing Goldfinches to do so in November, as the birds were then well through the moult. He also gave some valuable hints as to feeding newly-caught birds, also his own experience and management when birds went soft. Altogether it was a very interesting lecture, and at the finish quite a number of questions were asked and ably answered. At the close Mr. McGown (vice-president) proposed a hearty vote of thanks to the lecturer. Next meeting May 16th, when classes for F.F. show will be fixed, and it is hoped all will attend.—J. Hart, Sec.

EDINBURGH AND DIST. C.B.S.

Meeting held Tynecastle Church Hall, April 20, the President, Mr. J. Charlton, presiding over a capital attendance. Messrs. Robertson and Thomas were proposed and admitted as new members. Classification for annual show was gone into, and after considerable discussion, it was decided to have the same as formerly, with the exception of the contest section it being agreed to amalgamate Crested cock and hen classes, also Crestbred cock and hen classes. Judges were then nominated. Members are reminded that next meeting (on May 21st) is the last for the session for receiving new members, and also contributions, to which it is hoped there will be a hearty response. Classification of table show in July will also be settled. This meeting has also been fixed as "question night."—J. I. Mackie, Sec.

PONTYPRIDD AND DIS. F. & F.S.

Annual meeting, held Victoria Hotel, April 20. There was a good attendance, presided over by Mr. J. Phillips (in the absence of the chairman). Following officers elected: President, Councillor Arthur Seaton; chairman, Councillor Daniel Arnott; vice-chairman, Mr. A. Herbert; auditors, Messrs. Idris Edwards and W. Jones; secretary re-elected. Date for next open show fixed for December 4th. Auditor gave his report on the past year's work, which showed a balance in hand of £4 8s., which is very gratifying. The best thanks of the members were given Councillor A. Seaton, Councillor D. Arnott and Mr. W. C. Hinckley for very valuable assistance rendered during the past year. The outlook points to a very successful year. It is intended to increase the radius for membership. As this society has always been very prompt in paying prize-money, exhibitors should give them every support possible. All fanciers around the district would be wise to join, and thereby give an impetus to the cage bird section. It is probable a challenge cup will be put up for competition for members.—A. A. Gordon McLucas, Hon. Sec.

CARDIFF C.B.S.

Meeting held Maskell Temperance Hotel, April 15th. Mr. Whetten presided, supported by Mr. F. Slocombe. We were also pleased to see our old friends, Messrs. G. Sampson and W. Horrinton. Secretary reported he had engaged Mr. Mundell to judge at the open show along with Messrs. Vardy and Longden; also secretary had booked St. Andrew's Parish Hall for the show. After a long discussion it was resolved that partners in members' cup competition each pay a fee, but to count points as an individual. Messrs. W. Price, W. Sbelly, and H. Townsend were enrolled as members. Resolved that at our next meeting we fix date, also elect judge for Y.B. show. Mr. W. Morgan promised to bring up a scheme to raise a guarantee fund for the open show. Decided that we have a question night at next meeting. Mr. E. James then gave his paper, "Advice to Novices." Mr. James had evidently gone to an infinite amount of trouble in preparing so interesting a paper. At the close he was asked a number of questions which he answered in quite an original way. A hearty vote of thanks was passed to him. The secretary apologised for not announcing meeting in the Fancy papers.—E. Thomas, Sec.

YORK C.B.S.

Meeting held April 15th at All Saints Schoolroom, when there was a good attendance to hear a lecture on breeding and exhibiting Norwich Plainheads by Mr. A. Humphries (York). The lecture was most interesting and practical. Mr. Humphries first of all pointed out the various qualities which constituted a good bird, and suggested the pairing of birds with different outstanding characteristics. He advised novices to start with a good pair of birds, but not necessarily show specimens. He dealt fully with feeding, and gave practical hints for the breeding season, and alluded to the treatment during moult. In conclusion he referred to the necessary work of washing and staging the birds. It was a practical lecture by a practical fancier, and who were not present missed a treat. Mr. A. Richardson proposed a vote of thanks to the lecturer, and remarked on the time Mr. Humphries must have spent in preparing it. Mr. F. Simons seconded with a smart little speech. Several members asked questions, which were answered by Mr. Humphries. We have a splendid agenda this year, and at next meeting (May 13th) Mr. H. E. Shorney will give us another lecture on British birds; we hope all members will try and be present, as no doubt this will be another enjoyable evening.—H. Sayles, Hon. Sec.

STIRLING AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

Meeting held Douglas Hotel, April 6, Mr. W. Summers presiding over a good attendance. Some new members were enrolled. Rules were revised and amended. Judges were then nominated. It was decided to go over the classification at next meeting, May 4.—W. Clubb, Sec.

GARSTON B.B.A.

A meeting was held April 18th, at Earp-st. Schoolroom, when a most interesting and intellectual lecture was given by Mr. Cutmore on the diseases of birds, with illustrations of the intestines and the forming of eggs. Many questions were asked which Mr. Cutmore very kindly explained, and a very pleasant evening concluded with a vote of thanks to Mr. Cutmore for his kindness.—A. T. Mullock, Assist. Sec.

NORTH WALES C.B.S.

Committee meeting, held April 22nd, Mr. G. Jones, vice-chairman, presiding. It was stated that the prospects for the members' show on Whit-Monday next were exceedingly bright. Specials will be given in every class, and also extra specials. The last day of entry is May 18th. Schedules will be issued at the end of this week. Prize money will be paid day of show.—J. Wynne Parry, Hon. Sec.

NOTTINGHAM AND DIST. O.S.

A very well attended meeting was held in the Mechanics' Hall, April 16, when Mr. H. J. Chick judged a table show of British birds and Mules, Mr. Caunt taking the prizes in British. In the Mule class: 1, Holmes; 2, 3, Hodkinson. After judging discussion and criticism were invited, and Mr. Chick answered all questions very readily. A vote of thanks was passed to him, and he readily promised to come again and lecture on feeding and preparing British birds for exhibition. One new member was proposed, and a very successful and enjoyable meeting was brought to a close. All fanciers are cordially invited to join and make it thoroughly representative in all sections.—J. G. Royce, Assist. Hon. Sec.

SHERIFFHILL F. AND F.S.

Meeting held April 6, St. John's Mission Hall, Mr. J. Davison in chair. After secretary had given report of judges' fees it was carried that we ask Mr. Gilhespy (Gateshead) to judge half-year's show. For the benefit of our members it was agreed to alter date from June 29, and bring it a week forward, that is, June 22. For our next meeting (May 4th) we have secured the services of that good fancier Mr. J. Smith (Sheriffhill) to judge cage birds at our table show. I want all members to do their best in seeking specials for our show, and, of course, any donations for our funds; also to come to the meetings as some members' faces are almost forgotten. Mr. T. Smith was proposed for membership. If any fancier would like to join please come to the above meeting place first Saturday in each month, or write me at 26, Middle Road.—W. Stockton, Hon. Sec.

DERBY C.B.S.

At last meeting it was decided to hold a F.F. show at Melbourne, early in July, and in connection with this two singing birds, given by two of the club members, for a prize drawing, tickets to be sold for same, which will include admission to the show, at a small price of 2d.; and it was decided to try and obtain drawing-room cages for same. Books of the draw will be out early next month, and it is hoped all members will do their best to sell as many tickets as possible, so that the club can have a good show. The Derby members will go by brake to Melbourne, which it is hoped will be a good outing. Also decided that judge for our open show on October 11 and 12 be Mr. J. H. Roe. Will members that have not paid their levy kindly let the secretaries have it by the end of this month, so as to finish up last year's account, and oblige—G. H. Wharam and H. T. G. Bamsey, Secs.

OX ONE F.S.

Annual general meeting held Cape of Good Hope Hotel April 12th, President Hastings in chair. Balance-sheet read; and although a severe loss on the open show of £33 was sustained, the society has paid all its liabilities. After a vote of thanks to the many donors of prizes and to honorary officers had been passed, balance-sheet was adopted. Officers for ensuing year elected: Hon. auditor, Mr. French Haines, A.L.A.A., being elected (in place of Mr. J. Haines, F.A.S., deceased); committee re-elected, Messrs. G. F. Parker, Locke, and Jakeman taking the places of others resigned; treasurer, Mr. W. F. Cross; and Mr. A. H. Calcutt secretary. A discussion ensued respecting the holding of demonstrations, table and members' shows, after which it was duly arranged for the committee to arrange a members' show at an early date. The subs. was fixed at 2s. 6d. per annum, and membership open to all. This concluded a pleasant yearly meeting.—A. H. Calcutt, Sec.

ANNFIELD PLAIN AND DISTRICT F. AND F.C.B.S.

LIVERPOOL B.B.A.

Meeting held Oldham Hall, April 12th, Mr. F. Handley in chair. Messrs. Cowgill and Wellings were elected judges for our old show in November if not engaged for that date. Two new members were proposed. Afterwards we had a judging competition on Britishers, Mr. Metcalfe placing the birds. No one succeeded in placing same correctly afterwards, the result being a tie for first prize, Messrs. Eccleston and Brotherton (4 each correctly); 2nd prize divided between Messrs. J. Walker and T. R. Jones (3 each); and 3rd prize divided between Messrs. Bell and W. Jones (2 each). Afterwards we had a discussion on same, the owner giving us his views and how he obtained the birds and kept them in condition. Numerous questions were asked, and we look like having more British birds shown in future.—J. Lloyd, Assist.-Sec.

COWDENBEATH C.B.S.

Agreed to appoint six judges in place of four. These were nominated, and the secretary instructed to write for terms. Decided, not to print members' cards this year. Secretary was instructed to write local printers for estimates for season's printing. Re closed rings; agreed, to leave it to the individual members to use them or not. The Club's "smoker" was fixed for June 4th, in the "Old Inn"; admission 1/-. Next meeting in the Crown Hotel, May 18th. Following new members proposed and accepted:—Messrs. W. Dodds, G. Sinclair T. Findlay, J. Muir, W. Renton, J. Jackson, J. Skinner, P. Innes, W. and J. Grewar, showing excellent progress. The chairman complimented Mr. A. Simpson (who had most new members to propose) on his recruiting ability. An excellent attendance of members augurs well for the coming season.—J. R. Reid, Sec.

LONDON AND PROVINCIAL O.S.

Interesting Lecture and Discussion.

We had a very fine lecture on "Beauty in Birds," by Mr. E. Kay Robinson, illustrated with lantern slides, on April 11th, when there was a very large gathering of members and friends—80 in all. This was really a very instructive, as well as entertaining, lecture, and was greatly appreciated. Several questions were asked by Messrs. Marley, Mortlock, Cousens, Crabb, and others, which the lecturer answered. A very interesting discussion on British birds took place on April 18th, when Mr. Crabb presided over a very fair number. Mr. Marley gave some interesting facts regarding the Hawfinch, Corn Bunting, Linnet, and Goldfinch. He described the different foods necessary for these birds, their moulting and preparation for show. Mr. Mortlock spoke at some length on the Linnet and Goldfinch. Mr. Cousens asked several questions which brought out some valuable points. Mr. Crabb proposed a vote of thanks to both Mr. Marley and Mr. Mortlock. The following gentlemen have joined:—Messrs. T. M. Alexander, J. D. Dean, and E. H. Hull.—C. W. Law, Hon. Sec.

ANFIELD, EVERTON C.B.S.

Meeting held Headquarters, April 22nd, Mr. W. Bell (chairman) presiding. There was a very fair attendance. But the table show of British was not up to expectations. There are at least 40 British bird members, and some of the finest specimens are owned by them. Nevertheless, there were some fine specimens present. Mr. Walker judged. The show would have been much better patronised had it been held earlier. However, Messrs. Harrison, Bell, Cross, and Wright, swept the board, and unless the novices put their birds out, I am afraid they will stand a poor chance of having a cup to compete for. The meeting to be held at headquarters on May 13th, 8 o'clock, is important to all members. Classes for the next feather and other shows will be settled and the cups allotted to certain specimens. I would remind members residing at a distance from headquarters, that if they do not turn up they will only have themselves to blame if things are not arranged to their liking. I would like to remind fanciers that if they put together their best pairs on May 1st, they are sure to have young birds about 7 weeks old for the next feather show. I would also remind novices to get show cages purchased in good time. Don't forget the ramble to Knowsley Wood on June 2nd (Sunday). Fanciers' wives and lady friends, and juniors, will be welcomed.—R. B. Wright, Hon. Sec.

BOLDON COLLIERY C.B.S.

Meeting held April 20, Mr. T. Hall in chair. There was a good muster of members present. Business: Fixing date of F.F. show and judge. Moved, that our F.F. show be on July 6th, in the Co-operative Hall; judge, W. L. Smith (South Shields). New members elected: Messrs. E. Noble (Boldon Colliery), W. Ayers (Jarrow).—A. Widdowfield, Sec.

REDHILL C.B.S.

At a meeting held 16th April, our chairman (Mr. Baldock) gave us an exhibition of cage making, which he performed in a very able manner. He commenced with the raw boards, and made a complete finish. A hearty vote of thanks was given him by the members, who very much enjoyed the exercise, and those who were unable to be present missed a very instructive evening.—A. W. Bacon, Hon. Sec.
